New Slashes In U. S. Jobs Seen Under Next Budget

Government Operation Fund Cut 32 Per Cent by Douglas.

Director Started On Drastic Plan

Counts Refinancing Bills in $2,500,000,000 Cost Estimate.

By Walton Onslow.

Government departments are in for even a more drastic trimming than hitherto suspected, it appeared certain last night.

Lewis Douglas, Director of the Budget, said the first Roosevelt budget, already cut 34 per cent under the last Hoover estimates, includes $800,000,000 interest on the public debt. This means the proposed $2,500,000,000 budget will include but $1,700,000,000 for ordinary Government operations.

This is approximately 32 per cent less than the present budget provided for operating Government departments, not including financing the debt.

Jumps Slash 7 Per Cent.

It not only retains the 25 per cent horizontal slash ordered by the economy act, but it exceeds it by 7 per cent.

The implications are plain. Although the budget provides funds to restore the 15 per cent pay cut if deemed advisible by President Roosevelt, there will be considerably less money to go around. Inevitably it means ordinary Government operations must be reduced, and this means more Government employes are going to lose jobs.

This will hold true if Congress approves the budget as presented, which is practically unprecedented. However, if Congress wants to revise the estimates upward, it will face the ugly condition of the public debt, already beginning to act like a stratosphere ascension.

The budget director is determined to reduce the public debt, now within three billions of the all-time high, if possible, and to do away with the deficit. It is known authoritatively that he is not deceiving himself about having two budgets, one of which can be disregarded. To him, there is but one budget, and this budget right now has a thumping deficit of $612,000,000 caused by the extraordinary emergency expenditures.

Decisive Action Necessary.

To bring some sort of order into the Government's finances, which now appear to have the bit in their teeth, decisive action on reducing expenditures is obviously necessary, the budget director admits. The revalation that Douglas has set the 1935 budget goal at two-and-a-half billion was drastic enough, but the disclosure last night that he intends this figure to include public debt financing is tremendous in its significance.

The first of the department estimates, which certainly will be slashed vitally, will move to the House Appropriations Committee November 27. These will contain the estimates for the Veterans' Administration. Thereafter the estimates for Navy, Justice, State, Commerce and Labor Departments, which likewise will show deep blue penciling, will go to Capitol Hill.

What operating on a $1,700,000,000 budget will mean to the individual departments of the Government will be the unhappy lot of department heads to figure out. The obvious assumption is that there will be horizontal slashes in activities, with subsequent cuts in personnel.

The difficulty centers on the cost of the drive for recovery. With Public Works, AAA, the Farm Credit Administration, RFC, Tennessee Valley Authority and other emergency organizations spending more than a hundred million dollars

Football Upheavals Jolt 3 Leaders Out Of Unbeaten Ranks

College football upheavals in all sections of the Nation yesterday shook three teams loose from their clean records and marred the slate of a fourth—Michigan—which had been considered the most invincible of all.

Georgia received its first setback, a 14-to-6 defeat by Auburn. Oregon dropped from the ranks of the unbeaten with a 26-to-0 loss to Southern California. Nebraska suffered the loss of its unbeaten record by a 6-to-0 defeat by Pitt. Minnesota was the team that held Michigan to a scoreless tie.

In the East, Princeton continued to reign with Army as the leading football power, beating Navy, 13 to 0. The Tigers remain the only major college team unbeaten, untied and unscored on. Army beat Penn Military, a minor foe, 12 to 0. Another of the unbeaten brigade to preserve its record was Duke, 21 to 0, victor over North Carolina.

Figuring in an upset that brought to an end its string of four straight losses was Notre Dame, which upset Northwestern, 7 to 0.

Police Battle Stadium Mob; Jail Besieged

Carnegie Victory Trophy Vanishes; 3 Seized as Fists Fly.

Fists, elbows and feet flew thick and fast late yesterday as police, spectators and several husky football players battled over possession of the pigskin used in the Carnegie Tech-Georgetown grid clash at Griffith Stadium.

Three youths, said to be Georgetown students, were booked at the Second Precinct on disorderly conduct charges. Lieut. Charles Weber, Second Precinct, was kicked and pummeled in the melee as he proved his worth as a defensive back of no mean ability.

A swarm of several hundred Georgetown rooters surrounded the Second Precinct as an anticlimax. They jeered and taunted the bluecoats. Dares were hurled from both sides, but the final action saw no casualties.

Final Whistle Starts Rumpus.

Action began with the whistle signaling the game was over. Frank Williamson, Georgetown player, was in possession of the ball. He turned and flipped the oval to the Georgetown sidelines.

An unidentified youth took the pass on the dead run. Pell mell, 300 interferers threw a cordon around him. The postgame pass snarer darted toward the gate between the right-field pavilion and the first-base grandstand.

Two bulky tackles of Carnegie Tech, identified as Graham and Boyd, set out in pursuit of the pigskin—property of the winning Pennsylvanians by virtue of football tradition.

At Billy Smith's hotdog emporium under the grandstand, the self-designated ball carrier went down in a scrimmage pile of jerseys, topcoats and collegiate fedoras.

Lieut. Weber Charges.

Lieut. Weber charged alone into the mass. At the bottom of the pile lay Graham and Boyd. Straight-arming, pushing and using his hands on the defense, Lieut. Weber managed to extricate Graham and shooed him to the showers, then plunged again into the fray. Finally Boyd was rescued as the patrol wagon and police reserves rushed up. Three youths were muscled into the police van. The mob crowded menacingly around the "wagon."

In second gear and siren sounding, the police machine forced a path through the crowd. Most of the demonstrators followed to the

Divers, Flier Hunt Hart's Body in Bay

Prisoner Taken to Crime Scene Under Guard Against Lynching.

San Francisco, Nov. 18 (AP).—Guarded closely against lynching, Thomas H. Thurmond was taken today from the city prison here to San Mateo Bridge to point out the place he and John M. Holmes threw the tied and unconscious body of Brooke Hart, whom they confessed they kidnaped for ransom, into San Francisco Bay.

Two professional divers and an airplane were added to the forces searching for the 22-year-old son of a wealthy San Jose Merchant.

The divers went into the river at a point where investigators found a bloodstain on the bridge rail, near the place where police found a concrete block like those Thurmond has said were used to make sure Hart's body would stay at the bottom of the bay.

Woman Questioned.

In San Jose, Sheriff William J. Emig made public a statement he said was given to him and two deputies by a young married woman, Mrs. Gertrude Estenssen, who said she "kept company" with Holmes when they were in their teens, and that Holmes recently had asked her to go away with him, but that she had not taken the proposal seriously.

Questioned by newspapermen, Mrs. Estenssen denied there had been any romance with Holmes. She and her husband and Mr. and Mrs. Holmes had played bridge and gone to shows together, she said.

Sheriff Emig expressed the opinion that Holmes had plotted the kidnaping to get money for his projected elopement. He said Holmes had admitted he was in love with Mrs. Estenssen.

Insanity Plea Hinted.

Relatives of both Holmes and Thurmond indicated today the two would enter insanity pleas.

Fred Thomas, district attorney of Santa Clara County, deciding not to take the time for a grand jury investigation, asked Sheriff Emig to sign kidnaping complaints that the men might be brought to trial on a capital charge as soon as possible.

Investigators began a new at-

Dollfuss Assailant Given 5-Year Term

Vienna, Nov. 18 (AP).—Rudolph Dertil, who shot and wounded Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss, October 3, was found guilty today and sentenced to five years 'n jail.

Dertil's conviction followed a five-minute appearance by Chancellor Dollfuss, now recovered from the two small-caliber bullet wounds he received from the revolver of the former army bugler.

Dollfuss testified Dertil ambushed him in the parliamentary building.

90,000,000 Japanese Pray For Birth of Dynasty Heir

Tokyo, Nov. 18 (AP).—Ninety million loyal Japanese prayed today that the child to be born soon to the emperor and empress will be a boy, an heir to carry on the "dynasty for ages eternal."

Physicians in the imperial household announced the child may be born late in December or early in January. It will be the fifth of their majesties, but the others are girls, three of whom are living.

There is great activity in the household and in much of the kingdom. Governors of seven prefectures were ordered to send one young woman "of the best physical condition and unimpeachable character" as candidates for the position of wet nurse to the infant.

Only two, however, of the seven will be chosen, and their honor will be great.

Preparations for the expected arrival have taken precedence over everything else in the imperial palace.

Even if the baby is a girl there will be nation-wide rejoicing for the safety of the empress Nagako and the child, but the celebrations will not be so extensive as if it were a prince to be welcomed.

Already preparations are in the making for announcing the birth in the three shrines of the palace—the Kashikodokoro, or Holy of Holies; the Korei-den, dedicated to the ancestors of the imperial family, and the Shinden, where the 80 "myriad" cows of the Shinto Pantheon are worshipped.

Imperial messengers will carry the tidings to the sun goddess at her main shrine at Ise.

Quiz Traces Cash Behind Long Group

Senators Will Seek Light on Financial Deals of Machine.

Call Bankers to Testify on Campaign Funds of Overton.

New Orleans, Nov. 18 (AP).—The searchlight of Senate investigators will be turned on the financial operations of the Huey P. Long political organization next week through testimony of New Orleans bank officials.

Three cashiers and two bank liquidators have been summoned to appear Monday before the Senate committee investigating the election of Senator John H. Overton, who rode into office with the backing of the Long political machine.

So far the committee has been unable to touch the subject of Long's campaign funds except to learn that most of the transactions were in cash. It was this subject that caused Seymour Weiss, Long's political treasurer, to defy the committee last February and refuse to answer questions propounded by the former committee attorney, Gen. Samuel T. Ansell.

The committee said Weiss will be recalled to the stand if the bankers give them leads that justify further scrutiny into the money end of the campaign.

Two Weeks for Reply.

Two more weeks will be devoted to the investigation of Louisiana, the committee decided today—one week for committee testimony and the last week for Senator Overton's rebuttal. Senator Overton protested that he was allowed only one week to counter four weeks of testimony, and Mrs. Hilda Phelps Hammond, chairman of the Women's Committee of Louisiana, entered a protest, saying her committee felt the senators should remain in Louisiana until all testimony is exhausted, and that hearings should be held in other parts of the State.

Shirley Wimberley, representative of the Francis Williams political faction, which has produced all of the witnesses heard this week, also urged the committee to go forward with the inquiry and not shut it off at the end of two weeks.

Chairman Tom Connally (Democrat, Texas), invited the Honest Election League and former Senator Edwin Broussard, who filed the charges of fraud and corruption against Senator Overton, to return to the investigation and submit witnesses. Senator Broussard and the league withdrew from the investigation on the ground today they had lost faith in the Senate committee.

Threats Charged.

Several witnesses were heard before the week-end adjournment, and they testified to seeing ballots disappear, people being allowed to vote with improper registration and poll tax papers, and intimidations of Broussard workers.

W. H. Cobb, who served as a Broussard commissioner in New Orleans, said 28 votes disappeared at his precinct, but when he seized all of the Overton ballots and re-

Police Identify Torch Victim

Philadelphia Man Sought in Death of Woman Found in Field.

Philadelphia, Nov. 18 (AP).—The body of a woman found in a field 15 miles north of Philadelphia, the apparent victim of a "torch" murder, was identified today as Tanka Hetman, of this city. Detectives are searching for John Zowcoski for questioning.

Stewart Nase, district attorney of Montgomery County, said he is convinced the woman was beaten and strangled to death in Philadelphia and the body taken to the lonely site near Dreshertown and set on fire.

Two women believed to be relatives of the man sought by the police were questioned at city hall for several hours and then released.

There were two theories advanced by the authorities. One that the slayer had some financial dealing with the woman and she wanted her money back; the other, that there was a love affair.

Soviet Denounced By Bullitt's Uncle

Pastor Calls Recognition "National Disgrace."

Philadelphia, Nov. 18 (U.P.).—The Rev. James F. Bullitt, uncle of the new American Ambassador to Russia, William C. Bullitt, tonight termed United States recognition of the Soviet as a "National disgrace."

The Rev. Bullitt characterized Russia as a "pariah among nations." He contended it was not only the Soviet religious program to which he objected but "their entire idea of government is wrong."

"Russia did not keep its promise not to spread Soviet propaganda in England and France and I see no reason to believe it will make an exception of us," he said.

Russia Puts Its Approval Upon Bullitt

Ambassador Accepted; U. S.-Soviet Relations Get Warm Start.

Moscow Likely to Name Trovanovsky Envoy to Washington.

By Kendall Foss.

Friendship between the United States and the Soviet Union got under way yesterday with a promptness and warmth which any European would describe as "typically American."

Word came from Moscow accepting William C. Bullitt as first American Ambassador (to no one's surprise), and indications were strong that the name of the first Soviet Ambassador to Washington would be announced soon. Alexander Trovanovsky, former Ambassador to Tokyo and now in charge of Far Eastern affairs in the Moscow Foreign Office, is regarded as the likeliest selection.

With official recognition scarcely 24 hours old, instructions went forth from the State Department to all its diplomatic missions abroad tot "enter into cordial official and social relations with your Soviet colleagues." Many dinners may be expected.

Litvinoff Entertains.

Litvinoff, no more and no less genial and smiling than before, entertained a long list of officials, including those with whom he has been associated during the negotiations, at luncheon at the Mayflower. It was the first time the Soviet government has ever officially entertained in the United States.

Tovaritch (Comrade) Litvinoff, to give him his usual Russian title, had to dig himself out from under a mountain of congratulatory telegrams to get to his luncheon.

Secretary of State Hull wired from his ship en route to Montevideo: "Gratified to learn that the people of the United States and Russia have resumed relations."

Foes of recognition were silent.

Embassy Sites Studied.

Moscow dispatches showed two large mansions were under consideration as the new American Embassy, according to the Associated Press. One is at Spiridonovka, No. 28, and houses the Supreme Court now. This is a large gray stone building, somewhat forbidding in aspect and the scene of many grim moments such as the death sentences pronounced on Stein and Vassilyev in March, 1931, for an attempted assassination of the German Ambassador and of the trial a year later of the Metro-Vickers men on charges of espionage, sabotage and bribery.

The other is at Spaso Peskovski, No. 10, and is now used for Central Executive Committee receptions, the most official gatherings in Soviet Russia. It is smaller, brighter, better maintained, yet adequate in size and dignity.

Quarters will be assigned by the Government to the embassy; the American Government will not have to purchase a place, for that would be against Soviet laws on private property. Both houses belonged to pre-Soviet millionaires.

Litvinoff Continues Talks.

Friendliness did not prevent Litvinoff from continuing with the negotiations which remain to be cleared up before he leaves Washington. He spent three-quarters of an hour at the Treasury yesterday morning, conferring with Acting Secretary Morgenthau and Ambassador Bullitt.

The three have a double task: to finish debt discussions and launch trade relations. It is believed a debt formula along the lines indi-

McCooey Reported Ready to Retire

Tammany's Brooklyn Ally Held Facing Ouster.

New York, Nov. 18 (AP).—The New York Times says John H. McCooey probably will retire as Democratic leader of Brooklyn.

Emissaries from Tammany Hall, with which McCooey has been allied, were said by the Times to have been informed definitely that the Brooklyn leader must relinquish his post if Tammany is to receive any recognition from the National Administration.

Most of the Brooklyn Assembly district leaders were described as having expressed a willingness to go along with the Roosevelt wing of the party, headed by Postmaster General James A. Farley, and to be ready to choose another borough leader.

Weather Again Delays Stratosphere Flight

Akron, Ohio, Nov. 18 (AP).—After a last minute study of weather maps, Lieut. Comdr. T. G. W. Settle late tonight announced his stratosphere flight will be postponed until Monday morning.

Unfavorable weather conditions caused the postponement. The huge balloon is inflated and the gondola packed with scientific instruments for study of the cosmic ray.

Roosevelt Calls Foes Of Gold Policy 'Tories'; U. S. Chamber Hits Plan

Business Men Attack Money Experiments; Rift Seen.

Ask Government to Set Fixed Value for Dollar.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Marking the first open break between the recognized spokesmen for organized business and the Roosevelt Administration, the board of directors of the United States Chamber of Commerce yesterday called on the President to announce immediately an early return to the gold standard and "complete avoidance of monetary experimentation, greenbackism and fiat money."

The organization, while not specifying a return to the old gold standard, demanded a "fixed gold value of the dollar properly determined" and abandonment at once of "theoretical or arbitrary ideas of 'price-index' fixation of the value of gold."

Attack Significant.

The chamber of commerce resolution, regarded as one of the sharpest and most significant attacks yet made on the Administration's gold purchase policy, was made public coincidentally with a speech in Savannah, Ga., by President Roosevelt in which he assailed as "modern Tories" those who oppose or question his experimental policies.

Meanwhile with the President in the South for two weeks, execution of his monetary policy was in the hands of Henry Morgenthau, jr., Acting Secretary of the Treasury, under the guidance and advice of Prof. George F. Warren, sponsor of the gold-purchase plan. It is assumed that Mr. Roosevelt will be in daily telephonic communication with Mr. Morgenthau for the next two weeks.

Price Still Unchanged.

For the fifth successive day the Reconstruction Finance Corporation left the price for gold unchanged, at $33.56 an ounce, less than the world price. At London the price of gold opened at $33.58 an ounce and closed at $33.82. Meanwhile the dollar further weakened in foreign exchange, dropping from $5.24 to the pound sterling on the London market to $5.29¼, and finally slightly recovering, with the closing price $5.27¾.

Trading in stocks during the half-day session was irregular, with most issues holding gains recorded earlier in the week. The commodity markets—wheat and cotton—sagged slightly. Bar silver dropped 1¼ cents an ounce, despite the renewal of agitation Friday on Capitol Hill for silver purchases by the Government.

General perplexity existed as to what would be the next move in the gold-purchase operation—whether the $33.56 an ounce price would remain unchanged during this week, whether it would be increased daily or whether it might be decreased. The latter course was suggested in the general discussion of the subject as a means of "testing the brakes"—determining whether a movement in the opposite direction would produce the expected result.

Await Treasury Move.

Financial circles appeared inclined to interpret the maintenance of a status quo in the gold operation as a movement designed to

FRANCIS B. SAYRE, son-in-law of the late President Wilson, who has been named Assistant Secretary of State, succeeding Harry F. Payer.

Francis Sayre Is Appointed Hull's Assistant

Wilson's Son-in-Law Well Known as Educator and Diplomat.

Francis B. Sayre, who married Miss Jessie Woodrow Wilson, daughter of the late President Wilson, in the White House in 1913, will return to Washington as Assistant Secretary of State. His appointment to fill the vacancy left by Harry F. Payer, who has been transferred to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, was announced at the State Department yesterday.

Since his wedding in Washington, which took place immediately after his graduation from Harvard Law School, Mr. Sayre has had experiences that fit him well for a place in the State Department. He made his debut in international diplomacy when he was sent by the King of Siam, to whom he had been adviser on foreign affairs, to Europe in an attempt to obtain abrogation of the old treaties which gave nine European powers a foothold in that country.

Decorated by Siam.

Within a single year the nine powers had agreed to the ideas of Sayre and the Siamese ruler. Returning to Siam, Mr. Sayre was showered with honors and decorations.

The new Assistant Secretary of State was born in Bethlehem, Pa., in 1885. He was graduated from Williams in 1909. His interest in social problems led to his meeting Miss Wilson, who was interested in settlement work, and their subsequent marriage. Mrs. Sayre died less than a year ago, leaving her husband and three children.

While in college Mr. Sayre organized a good government club, investigated social problems at first hand and was manager of the football team. Following his marriage, Mr. Sayre became assistant to Harry A. Garfield, president of Williams College. He later left Williams to go to Harvard as an instructor in the law school and later was given a professorship.

Y. M. C. A. Worker in War.

He left the law school to serve overseas with the Y. M. C. A. during the war. Later he obtained a leave of absence to go to Siam. Last year he left the classroom again to become commissioner of corrections of Massachusetts. He is expected to resign that post to come to Washington.

Between jobs, Mr. Sayre has done hospital work along the Labrador coast with Sir Wilfred Grenfell; he explored 2,300 miles of the Yukon River in connection with mining claims, and then crossed from Alaska to Siberia in a 15-ton schooner and explored in that country. During another vacation he spent several months on sheep ranches in Montana and Wyoming.

LaGuardia Due Here Tuesday To Push N. Y. Subway Loan

Mayor-elect Fiorello H. LaGuardia, of New York, who is returning from a short vacation trip to Havana, will stop in Washington en route home on Tuesday for a conference with Public Works Administrator Ickes on the application of New York City for a $25,500,000 subway loan.

With the subway project already 90 per cent completed and the application approved by New York City, supporters are increasing their efforts to obtain a loan from the diminishing funds of the Public Works Administration.

Senator Robert F. Wagner urged the loan be made as quickly as possible. He has estimated that work remaining to be done on the system would provide 7,500,000 man-hours of employment.

Herbert L. Carpenter, chairman of the city committee on subway completion, who was in Washington yesterday, said the project has the approval of William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor.

Carpenter said the loan could put to work from 6,000 to 7,000 men at once.

Arthur S. Tuttle, State P.W.A. engineer, and the State advisory board, approved the application November 6, and the loan now awaits only approval or rejection by the public works board in Washington.

30,000 Cheer Address of President at Savannah, Ga.

He Hails Russian Amity as Bolstering Peace of World.

By Leon Dure, Jr.

Warm Springs, Ga., Nov. 18. President Roosevelt arrived here tonight after breaking his trip from Washington at Savannah, where, before a cheering crowd of 30,000, he hit back at critics of his monetary policy and discussed Russian recognition.

Mr. Roosevelt declared modern "Tories" have contended those in control of the National Government "are guilty of experimentation." He admitted the charge.

"If I read my history right," he added, "the same suggestion was used when Englishmen, protesting in vain again intolerable conditions at home, founded new colonies in the American wilderness and then Washington and Adams and Bulloch conducted another great experiment in 1776.

"The saving grace of America lies in the fact that the overwhelming majority of the Americans are possessed of two great qualities—a sense of humor and a sense of proportion. With one they smile at those who would divide all the money in the Nation on a per capita basis every Saturday night, and those who lament that they would rather possess pounds and francs than dollars.

"Can't Cure" in Year.

"With our sense of proportion, we understand and accept the fact that in the short space of one year we can not cure the chronic illnesses that beset us for a dozen years, nor restore the social and economic order with equal and simultaneous success in every part of the Nation and in every walk of life."

Smilingly declaring he had heard so much of so-called economics in recent weeks, he quoted from John Stuart Mill, "the father of economists," for justification of the recovery program:

"History shows that great economic and social forces flow like a tide over communities only half conscious of that which is befalling them. Wise statesmen foresee what time is thus bringing and try to shape institutions and mold men's thoughts and purposes in accordance with the change that is silently coming on.

"The unwise are those who bring nothing constructive to the process and who greatly imperil the future of mankind by leaving great questions to be fought out between ignorant change on one hand and ignorant opposition to change on the other."

Sees Hopes Renewed.

Recalling his honorary chairmanship of the bicentennial, his family's kinship to the Oglethorpe settlers, and his absence for the last nine months, Mr. Roosevelt declared he was "glad to see smiles replacing gloom, to see hope replacing despair, to see faith restored to its rightful place."

Frequently interrupted by applause the President emphasized the effect of friendly American-Soviet relations on world peace and friendship.

"I believe sincerely," he said, "that the most impelling motive behind the conversations which were successfully concluded yesterday between Russia and the United States was the desire of both countries for peace and the strengthening of the peaceful purposes of the civilized world."

A mighty roar from the throng of 30,000 greeted Mr. Roosevelt's interpretation of the negotiations. He was

Budget Row Perils Regime of Sarraut

Deputies Slash Measure, Ignore Protests.

Paris, Nov. 18 (AP).—Steadily undermining the cabinet of Premier Albert Sarraut, the Chamber of Deputies' finance committee proceeded today to emasculate or substitute every article it considered in the Premier's economy and budget-balancing plan.

Danger of Sarraut's early overthrow was heightened at a midnight session when the committee overrode the Premier's personal protest at treatment of his economy bill.

The Premier declared the gaps between his measures and those of the committee were too wide to accept, but the committee immediately readopted its own alterations.

100 Boys Flee Safely In French School Fire

Versailles, Nov. 18 (AP).—A hundred children were forced to flee tonight from the American-supported boys' school at the historic Chateau Villebon when fire wrecked the dormitory and class rooms.

All escaped safely. The fire was attributed to defective wiring. Many American children attend the school.

2,078 Is Total Of Home Loans Made in Week

6,942 Are Completed to Date, for $20,275,125, Fahey Announces.

The 257 field offices of the Home Owners Loan Corporation completed approximately 350 loans a day during the week ended November 10, the corporation announced yesterday.

During the week 2,078 loans were completed, bringing the total of loans completed since the organization of the corporation to 6,942. This is more than 1 per cent of the nearly 600,000 applications received.

The average loan made during the week was $2,921. The dollar value of loans already completed is now $20,275,125. The number of applications now tentatively approved, but for which loans have not been completed, is 125,631, with a dollar value of $357,074,376. During the week the number tentatively approved was 13,938, with a dollar value of $39,843,072.

Speed Sought.

"Orders have been issued to increase staffs of field appraisers and thus expedite the completion of loans already tentatively approved and the increasing number of new loans being tentatively approved daily," said John H. Fahey, chairman of the corporation.

He said bonds of the corporation are now ready for distribution where new loans are closed, or in exchange for interim certificates. He said the rate of applications tentatively approved and loans paid out is increasing, while the receipt of applications is decreasing.

Most Were Exchanges.

Of the 2,078 loans completed during the week, all except 54 were completed on the basis of exchange of bonds for mortgages. The 54 cash loans totaled $43,769.

"One problem facing the corporation," Fahey said, "is that of persons filing applications without real cause. It is evident that great numbers of persons filing applications are perfectly able to carry their present mortgages, but seek to obtain the 5 per cent long-term financing of the corporation and create defaults to this end. The board of directors has taken the emphatic position that it will give no consideration to such cases."

Clergy Denies Backing Riots

Archbishop Diaz, Mexico, Replies to Charges of Gen. Calles.

Mexico City, Nov. 18 (AP). — Dr. Pascual Diaz, Archbishop of Mexico, tonight countered charges of Mexico's "iron hand," Gen. Plutarco Calles, that student disorders at Guadalajara were caused by "the hidden and false hand of the clergy," with a direct denial.

"I can assure you," said the archbishop, "with the utmost truthfulness, that the clergy has nothing to do whatsoever in any way nor has any part in the movement launched by the students in order to obtain autonomy of their schools."

Two hundred and twenty persons are in jail in the state of Palisco, of which Guadalajara is a part, and a score of students and half a dozen police were hurt in riots Thursday. Five others were hurt the following day. The disorders broke out a month ago.

station, three blocks away. The ball, which late last night had not been located, was forgotten.

At the station police hustled the three youths across the threshold with the shouts of the mob a block away.

Those booked gave their names as Samuel Moore, 19, of New York; Joseph Finley, 18, of Georgetown University, and John McGuire, 18, of Georgetown University. They were charged with disorderly conduct and released on small bond.

While the youths were being booked the excited crowd arrived and began to taunt the policemen. A collection was taken to bail out the arrested youths.

Coach Jack Hagerty, of Georgetown, last night said he had rebuked Williamson for tossing the ball to the sidelines. The center is said to have declared he "lost his head" for a moment.

The Georgetown coach went to the Carnegie dressing room and presented the victorious invaders with another ball, along with the apologies.

U. S. Chamber Flays Money 'Experiments' of Roosevelt

allay fear and alarm preparatory to the Treasury's regular quarterly December 15 financial operation. The size of this operation and when its details will be announced have not been disclosed.

Usually the quarterly financial operations are announced about two weeks or ten days prior to the quarterly date. If this practice is followed the details of the December 15 operation would be made known then on December 2 or shortly thereafter. President Roosevelt's absence from the city, however, may delay the announcement a few days.

Treasury certificates totaling $727,692,000 reach maturity on December 15 and will have to be refunded. Due to increased expenditures because of the accelerated civil and public works programs it is expected the Treasury will wish to borrow some amount in excess of these maturities in order to keep its daily balance well above $1,000,000,000.

Consequently it would not be surprising if the Treasury offered short-term issues totaling between $800,000,000 and $1,000,000,000 on December 15. Depressed prices for United States Government securities and general uncertainty in the money markets will not be aids to the Treasury in floating new issues at this time, it is contended. Thus the belief prevails that a movement has been started to allay the alarm of the last two weeks.

Dampers on Inflation.

It was recalled yesterday that during the latter part of July, just before the issue of $500,000,000 eight-year Treasury bonds and $350,000,000 in two-year Treasury notes, and again in October immediately preceding the announcement of the plan to refund the Fourth Libetry loan, dampers were placed on talk of currency inflation. On both occasions the impression was created that the Administration had turned toward conservative monetary policies.

Concern over the Government's credit position and the price of its securities figured prominently in the resolution adopted unanimously by the directors of the Chamber of Commerce. They wanted the President to make an "unmistakable declaration that Government securities will not be driven to lower levels by reason of monttary actions."

"Protection of the credit of the Government," the resolution asserted, "is inseparable from public confidence in its obligations and faith in our circulating media, including currency, but mainly deposit credit. Upon the stability of the Government's securities now largely rests the maintenance of our banking, insurance and other fiduciary institutions and the flow of credit. Upon the integrity of the currency depends the well-being of the laborer, farmer, public servant, and their dependents, the continuation of thrift and savings, and a healty development of investments."

Attitude of Bankers.

This attitude represented the view of such bankers on the chamber's directorate as Robert V. Fleming, president of the Riggs National Bank here; Felix M. McWhirter, president of the People's State Bank in Indianapolis; Lewis E. Pierson, chairman of the board of the Irving Trust Co.; William R. Dawes, president of the Central Illinois Securities Corporation; W. E. Gephart, vice president of the First National Bank of St. Louis; Thomas R. Preston, president of the Hamilton National Bank of Chattanooga, Tenn., and Lyman E. Wakefield, chairman of the First National Bank & Trust Co., of Minneapolis.

In the two-day discussion of the Administration's monetary policy here these bankers, along with industrialists, expressed the view that the savings banks and fiduciary institutions were being seriously threatened by the results of the gold purchase policy — depressed bond prices. A story was told at one of these meetings of a comparatively small bank that in the last two weeks or so lost $500,000 in deposits —money believed to have been taken into Canada for investment and safekeeping.

But the chamber's resolution striking at the gold purchase policy was not the work of bankers alone. Industrialists predominate on the chamber's board and only 11 of the 55 members of the board were absent for this regular bimonthly meeting—one of the best attendance records in a long time, it was explained.

Sponsored by Strawn.

The resolution adopted, it was reported, was sponsored by Silas Strawn, Chicago lawyer, former head of a large mail order house and former president of the Chamber of Commerce, and by Fred W. Sargent, president of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway.

Other nationally known industrialists who were reported to have voted for it were: P. W. Litchfield, president of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.; Redfield Proctor, president of the Vermont Marble Co.; Paul Shoup, vice president of the Southern Pacific Railroad; Chester I. Barnard, president of the New Jersey Bell Telephone Co., and Henry I. Harriman, chairman of the board of the New England Power Co., and president of the chamber.

Mr. Harriman has been particularly friendly to the Roosevelt administration and under his Presidency the Chamber of Commerce until yesterday has refrained from criticism of Roosevelt policies, even though it opposed such policies in the past. Mr. Harriman applauded the NRA legislation when it was introduced in Congress. Until yesterday the only note of criticism from the chamber was directed at the securities act and it was not severe.

But the chamber's directors left no doubt of unalterable hostility to the present gold policy. They contended that the question of a sound national monetary policy was "paramount" and transcended all other issues. The chamber membership, the resolution recited, had committed the chamber to restoration of the gold standard, the balancing of public budgets and the removal of restrictions on foreign exchange.

The directors pointed out the chamber was "opposed to any policy of deliberately engendering price changes through measures which are solely monetary in character, recognizing that such measures are not conducive to stability."

Stress Need of Faith.

"In efforts to stimulate and foster improvement in the prices of ordinary commodities, of manufactured goods, and of auxiliary services," the resolution continued, "it is opposed to any action that creates distrust in the currency, as being incapable of producing a lasting improvement. In advocating a sound and adequate currency as essential for a greater volume and mobility of credit, it maintains that it is necessary to provide such basis for faith in credit and in currency as will permit their healthy employment in the normal processes of business enterprise.

"We believe it should be emphasized that the present fiscal policies have developed widespread confusion and disquiet. We strongly recommend that the President of the United States make an unmistakable declaration that Government securities will not be driven to lower levels by reason of monetary actions. We also urge that there be an immediate announcement of intention of an early return to a gold basis, with complete avoidance of monetary experimentation, greenbackism and fiat money and with complete recession from theoretical or arbitrary ideas of "price-index" fixation of the value of gold.

"Otherwise, there will be instability of employment, because of inability of any one to make forward commitments on a basis of reasonable business risk instead of speculative hazard. There will be continuance of the demoralization of the exchanges, with its harmful repercussions on all domestic and foreign trade. There will be insecurity for all classes of our people and a severe setback to the development of healthy recuperative processes, which in the main are based upon the decisions of individuals and not of government."

Public Works Stand.

The Chamber's directorate also adopted a brief resolution opposing the use of Public Works Administration funds "to finance units designed to compete with or duplicate existing units now rendering adequate service at reasonable cost" — believed to be directed chiefly at the Muscle Shoals project.

In another resolution the chamber urged that in financing low-cost housing projects the Government lend to privately organized, limited-dividend corporations instead of engaging directly in such construction.

A fourth resolution struck at one phase of NRA administration, laying down the proposition that "in the orderly administration of a code it is only the legal penalties and processes provided in the law and abuses obviously harmful to the public or inherently wrong that should have the attention of Government authorities." Aside from these conditions, each industry should have the right, "without official intervention of any kind," to administer its own code, the board declared.

New U. S. Job Cut Seen in Budget

monthly, expenditures are exceeding even the stepped-up revenues practically by the amount spent on the so-called "extraordinary" budget.

Realistic Attitude.

On highest authority, it was learned that Douglas is taking a realistic attitude on the pouring out of the millions. His theory is that there are not two budgets—the so-called ordinary and the extraordinary budgets. He is working on the theory that there is but one budget, that this budget has a tremendous deficit, and that it must be brought back to balance if the Federal credit is to stand up.

Everything else to the contrary, it is Douglas's contention that the Government has had but one budget ever since July. Before the new fiscal year started, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was bracketed outside the ordinary budget. For the '34 year it was brought back in. Despite assertions that the Government has been working a two-book system, Douglas has predicted all his work on the first Roosevelt budget on the inescapable fact that emergency expenditures will have to be paid for some way, and the Government has only one budget.

Far-Reaching Implications.

The implications of this are far-reaching. It means that the Bureau of the Budget is going to clamp on the screws on Government spending to the limit. If Congress continues to make emergency appropriations, that can not be avoided. However, before Congress can do this it must face the momentous fact that the public debt is getting out of hand as it has not done since the war. It now stands at 23½ billions.

Frankly facing this situation, Douglas has lopped the new budget in astounding manner. He does not yet know what revenue the new year will bring forth. Taking no chances, he has cut deeply with the hope that he is cutting deeply enough.

Treasury departments now are working on estimates of possible revenues for the 1935 budget. What they will be will not be known for about three weeks. There is much talk about vaunted liquor revenues. So far this has been nothing beyond speculation. Many observers are not optimistic about the outlook and others predict freely that taxes will have to go up.

The result of all this is that the Government will have to tend to its ordinary functions in the most parsimonious manner it has done for years. What Congress will do about the situation is of surpassing interest, but it appears that the piper is about to present his bill.

Bailey to Seek Tom Connally's Seat in Senate

Texan's Opponent Now Embroiled in "Kingfish" Controversy.

Dallas, Tex., Nov. 18 (AP).—Joseph Weldon Bailey, jr., of Dallas, one of Texas' three congressmen-at-large, announced tonight he would be a candidate next year for the seat now held by Tom Connally, of Marlin, junior United States Senator from Texas.

"I disagree with the junior Senator from Texas on many Governmental questions," Bailey said. "This being true, I have decided to accept the responsibility placed upon me by my friends and announce that I will be a candidate for the United States Senate in 1934.

Senator Connally, currently embroiled in a bitter political situation in New Orleans, as chairman of the Senate committee investigating the election of Senator John H. Overton, political ally of Senator Huey Long, has not yet announced his candidacy, but his friends have expressed confidence he will stand for a second term.

On Bailey's side, there was the desire of many of his friends that he advance to the Senate to carry on there the "Bailey tradition," again bringing into the upper house the name made famous there by his father, who served in the Senate 12 years.

Young "Joe" Bailey, who defeated the veteran J. H. (Cyclone) Davis, of Sulphur, for congressman-at-large last year with the largest vote for any of the congressional places, made his debut in public life after a successful career as a lawyer. He is 40 years old.

fused to surrender them until the votes were returned, he said they appeared from somewhere like magic.

"When I raised my kick," he said, "the Overton representatives, 14 of them, who had been counting the ballots on the table, went scurrying around all over the place, pretending to be looking for the ballots. Then they came back to the table and the ballots all of a sudden appeared."

Sheriff Kept Coming In.

He said a sheriff kept coming into the voting booths while people were voting and he had to chase him away four times and threaten him before he would stay out.

"He said he was picking up old paper," said the witness.

When the polls closed, Cobb said people rushed into the place and began scrambling with the ballots.

"Did you protest?" the witness was asked.

"No, do you think I was foolish?" he replied.

David Taylor, a Broussard watcher, said he was chased outside of the barrier at the polls and kept in the street where he couldn't see anything. When the votes were counted, he said, he was allowed to go in, but had lost interest as he felt the "election already was in the bag for Overton."

Daughter of Navy Man Weds in N. Y.

Virginia Lewis Is Bride of Donald K. Phillips.

New York, Nov. 18 (AP).—Miss Virginia Lewis, debutante daughter of Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. John Lewis of San Diego, and Donald K. Phillips, of Providence, R. I., were married today in the Church of the Transfiguration, "The Little Church Around the Corner."

The ceremony was performed by the rector, the Rev. Dr. Randolph Ray.

Mr. and Mrs. Phillips plan to make their home on Long Island.

Bridal Ceremony Is "Bridle" Event

All Mounted on Horses as Knot Is Tied.

Long Beach, Calif., Nov. 18 (AP). Cupid on horseback has been successful here.

Clad in riding togs, Miss Louise Neilson, 21, and David A. Bergstrom, 23, each astride a horse, were married tonight at a riding academy by V. W. Lilley, justice of the peace, who tied the knot while mounted on a roan.

The best man, the maid of honor, and 50 wedding guests, all attired in boots and breeches, attended the wedding on their favorite ponies. The marriage followed a romance begun on the Long Beach bridle paths.

"Caller" Draws Gun, Takes Man's Wallet

Attacked at the door of his home by an armed robber last night, Harry William Price, president of the Simmons Poultry Co., of 1620 Hobart place northwest, was forced to surrender his wallet containing a small amount of money.

Price told police he answered a knock at his door. His "caller," Price declared, drew a gun and demanded cash. When Price refused to comply, the gunman struck him in the face, pulled a second gun from his pocket and threatened to shoot. Price said he took the pocketbook, containing about $1.

Text of Roosevelt Speech

Opponents of New Deal Scourged in Savannah Speech as Inactive Obstructors Who Fail to See Inevitable Changes.

The text of the address delivered yesterday by President Roosevelt at the Georgia Bicentennial celebration in Savannah follows:

"Because my other State gave me the privilege of service as the honorary chairman of the celebration of this bicentennial year of the founding of Georgia I have come to Savannah in an official capacity.

"But I come here also because of all that Georgia means to me personally, through my long association with this State and also through the kinship which my wife and my children bear to the early settlers who participated with Oglethorpe in the founding of civilization on this portion of the Atlantic seaboard.

"Apart from the ties of colonial ancestry, I have additional kinship with the founders of the 13 American colonies. It has been remarked of late by certain modern Tories that those who are today in charge of your National Government are guilty of great experimentation. If I read my history right, the same suggestion was used when Englishmen, protesting in vain against intolerable conditions at home, founded new colonies in the American wilderness, and when Washingtons and Adamses and Bullocks conducted another great experiment in 1776.

Sees Cheer Replace Gloom.

"Three-quarters of a year have passed since I left Georgia; during that time you have conducted a dignified and history teaching Statewide celebration. During that same time, the lives of the people of this Commonwealth, like the lives of the inhabitants of the other States, have undergone a great change.

"I am happy in the thought that it has been a change for the better; that I come back to see smiles replacing gloom, to see hope replacing despair, to see faith restored to its rightful place.

"While we are celebrating the planting of the colony of Georgia, we remember that if the early settlers had been content to remain on the coast, there would have been no Georgia today. It was the spirit of moving forward that led to the exploration of the great domain of Piedmont and mountains that drove the Western border of the colony to the very banks of the Mississippi River itself. In all those years of the pioneer, there were the doubting Thomases, there was the persistent opposition of those who feared change, of those who played the part of the mule who had to be goaded to get him out of the stable.

American Principles Endure.

"In coming for a two weeks' visit among you my neighbors, I shall have opportunity to improve myself by reading of the makers of our history with the thought before me that although problems and terms change, the principles and objectives of American self-government remain the same. I have heard so much of so-called economics in recent weeks that it was refreshing the other day to have my friend, the Governor of New Hampshire, call my attention to a paragraph written a century ago by that father of economics, John Stuart Mill. He said:

"'History shows that great economic and social forces flow like a tide over communities only half conscious of that which is befalling them. Wise statesmen foresee what time is thus bringing and try to shape institutions and mold men's thoughts and purposes in accordance with the change that is silently coming on.'

"The unwise are those who bring nothing constructive to the process, and who greatly imperil the future of mankind, by leaving great questions to be fought out between ignorant change on one hand, and ignorant opposition to change, on the other.

America's Humor.

"The saving grace of America lies in the fact that the overwhelming majority of Americans are possessed of two great qualities—a sense of humor and a sense of proportion. With the one they smile at those who would divide up all the money in the Nation on a per capita basis every Saturday night and at those who lament that they would rather possess pounds and francs than dollars. With our sense of proportion we understand and accept the fact that in the short space of one year we can not cure the chronic illness that beset us for a dozen years, nor restore the social and economic order with equal and simultaneous success in every part of the Nation and in every walk of life.

"It is the pioneering spirit and understanding perspective of the people of the United States which already is making itself felt among other nations of the world. The simple translation of the peaceful and neighborly purposes of the United States has already given to our sister American republics a greater faith in our professions of friendship than they have held since the time, over a century ago, when James Monroe encouraged them in their struggles for freedom. So, too, I have had an example of the effect of honest statement and simple explanation of the fundamental American policy during the past week in Washington. For 16 long years a nation, larger even than ours in population and extent of territory, has been unable to speak officially with the United States or to maintain normal relations. I believe sincerely that the most impelling motive that has lain behind the conversations which were successfully concluded yesterday between Russia and the United States was the desire of both countries for peace and for the strengthening of the peaceful purpose of the civilized world.

Jefferson's Words on Russia.

"It will interest you to know that in the year 1809 the President of the United States, Thomas Jefferson, wrote as follows to his Russian friend, Monsieur Dashkoff:

"'Russia and the United States being in character and practice essentially pacific, a common interest in the rights of peaceable nations gives us a common cause in their maintenance.'

"In this spirit of Thomas Jefferson, Mr. Litvinoff and I believe that through the resumption of normal relations the prospects of peace over all the world are greatly strengthened.

"Furthermore, I am confident that in a State like Georgia, which had its roots in religious teachings and was the first state in which a Sunday school was established, there must be satisfaction to know that from now on any American sojourning among the great Russian people will be free to worship God in his own way.

"It is perhaps especially significant that I should speak of the resumption of relations with Russia in the city from which a century ago the first transatlantic steamship set out on its voyage to the old world.

"I am glad to be back on Georgia soil. I am hurrying to Warm Springs with special interest, for I shall see a splendid new building, given to the cause of helping crippled children by the citizens of the State of Georgia. And I am hurrying back to my cottage there for the almost equally important objectivee of seeing to it that a prize Georgia turkey is put into the primest possible condition for the Thanksgviing Day feast.

Fewer Hunger This Year.

"On this Thanksgiving I like to think that many more fathers and mothers and children will partake of turkey than for many years past. What a splendid thing it would be if in every community throughout the land, in celebration of this Thanksgiving—and here in Georgia in celebration of the bicentennial of the founding of the colony—every community would set as its Thanksgiving Day objective the providing of a Thanksgiving dinner for those who have not yet been blessed by the returning prosperity sufficiently to provide their own.

"Let me read to you in closing a message delivered a generation ago by a great son of a great Georgia mother, Theodore Roosevelt:

"'Materially we must strive to secure a broader economic opportunity for all men, so that each shall have a better chance to show the stuff of which he is made. Spiritually and ethically we must strive to bring about clean living and right thinking. We appreciate that the things of the body are important; but we appreciate also that the things of the soul are immeisurably more important. The foundation stone of National life is and ever must be the high individual character of the individual citizen.'" cheered again as he censored persons exhibiting a case of the "jitters" regarding the administration's fiscal policies.

Crowds See Train.

He closed with the declaration that more would have Thanksgiving turkey this year than in recent years, expressed the hope every community sees no family is missed, and recited a quotation from Theodore Roosevelt: "The foundation stone of national life is and ever must be the high individual character of the individual citizen."

With the President on the platform were Mrs. Roosevelt, Gov. Talmadge, Senators George and Russell, Mayor Thomas Gamble, Pleasant A. Stovall and Gordon Saussy, officials of the bicentennial, and many others.

Back through the streets the President rode, waving farewell.

All through south Georgia crowds gathered at stations to watch the Presidential special speed by, to catch the President's easy smile, his jaunty wave. Negroes stopped their mules in the fields to grin and doff their hats.

Hundreds gathered at Douglas, Fitzgerald and Cordele, the larger towns. From his private car, the President made "neighborly" speeches, bringing laughter and loud applause. For Georgia swears by Roosevelt, and Roosevelt was coming home.

Welles Flies to Atlanta.

Atlanta, Nov. 18 (AP).—Sumner Welles, United States Ambassador to Cuba, who will confer with President Roosevelt in Warm Springs tomorrow on insular affairs and American policy, stopped over here tonight en route. He declined to comment on Cuban conditions or hint what, if any, recommendations he might make.

Ambassador Welles merely said he would lay before the President an outline of Cuban conditions as he saw them and anything further about the conference would have to come from the President.

Meanwhile, advices from Cuba persisted that some factions, including President Grau San Martin, wished that Mr. Welles be recalled. The ambassador had nothing to say about these reports until he called on the President, he said.

The ambassador arrived in Atlanta shortly after noon by airplane. He flew with Mrs. Welles to Miami from Havana, continuing on by train to Jacksonville, Fla. There, he took a plane for Atlanta and Mrs. Welles went on to Washington.

$32,000 Cash for Farm Sets Record in Illinois

Hoopeston, Ill., Nov. 18 (AP).—The largest farm sale since 1930, bringing the highest price paid in this region in three years, was recorded when Ronald P. Cameron, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., bought 320 acres of farm land in Prairie Green Township, Iroquois County, from William Beggs, of Hoopeston, for $32,000 cash.

Cameron is a son-in-law of the late Mary Hartwell Catherwood, Illinois author.

tempt to locate the gun used in the kidnaping.

Mrs. Estenssen's statement said she never had discussed money matters with Holmes; that she did not know him well enough. Her questioners insisted money must have ben mentioned when Holmes suggested an elopement, but she denied it.

"There was no intention on my part of doing any such thing," she was quoted by the sheriff, "so I would not be interested in any money matters. I had no intention of leaving my husband or going with Holmes."

Wives Discussed Case.

The statement added that Mrs. Estenssen discussed the situation with Mrs. Holmes. She told Mrs. Holmes, she said, "that I had no intention of going away with her husband or leaving my husband. I told her I did not want to take her husband, I never tried," she added. "So we parted good friends."

Investigators paid particular attention to part of the statement saying the woman and her husband and Mr. and Mrs. Holmes had gone to a motion picture show the night of the kidnaping. She fixed the time as "between 7:30 and 8."

Young Hart was kidnaped about 6 o'clock, and about 7:25 p. m. two men, collecting firewood near the San Mateo Bridge, heard calls for help.

Mrs. Estenssen advised officers that Holmes had called at the Estenssen home about 4 p. m. to make the theater engagement.

Sheriff Emig and deputies believe the engagement was arranged by Holmes in an attempt to establish an alibi. They declared he apparently participated in the kidnaping and slaying between the afternoon and night visit with the Estenssens.

No Intimation of Crime.

Officers said Mrs. Estenssen declared Holmes never had intimated to her in any way that he planned participating in a kidnaping.

Sheriff Emig said Mrs. Estenssen's statements were voluntarily and that she had expressed a desire to aid authorities in clearing up the case.

Thurmond was quoted by Department of Justice agents as giving further details today of the slaying.

Thurmond disclosed, the agents said, that Hart was led to believe he was only being taken to some isolated spot to be robbed.

At the bridge, after he had been hooded with a pillow slip and knocked down, young Hart was described by Thurmond as struggling to his feet and pleading:

"Oh, please don't—why are you doing this?"

Called to Passing Car.

The agents quoted Thurmond as adding that a few minutes later an automobile came along and that Hart heard it and despite the smothering folds of the hood, shouted: "Help, Help." He was knocked down again, the officers said Thurmond told them, but struggled to a sitting position and moaned:

"Don't hit me—I have done nothing."

Rep. Fish Asks Senate Reject Bullitt as Envoy

Calls Soviet Recognition "International Hoax," Fears Loans.

The Senate is urged by Representative Hamilton Fish of New York, in a statement last night, to refuse to confirm appointment of William H. Bullitt as Ambassador to Russia. He asked that citizens urge their senators to votes against confirmation.

"Bullitt's record as a Communist sympathizer has been well known for the last 15 years," Fish said.

Fish referred to Russian recognition as a "colossal international hoax."

"Recognition was inevitable from the day Prof. Rexford Guy Tugwell, William C. Bullitt and former Senator Brookhart, ardent champions of Soviet methods, became the closest advisers to the President on the question of recognition," he continued. "The sound reasons presented by Woodrow Wilson, Bainbridge Colby, Charles Evans Hughes, Calvin Coolidge and other American statesmen against recognition counted for nothing to the brain trust, imbued with intellectual radicalism that differs little from communism on economic issues."

Sees Propaganda Threat.

"I have no fear of a Communist revolution in the United States, but the establishment in this country of numerous Communist consulates in our industrial cities will not only inspire and encourage American Communists to renewed activities, but will afford an opportunity for organized revolutionary leadership that might become a serious menace in our industrial centers of population if the depression and unemployment continue a year or so."

He said military dictatorships, such as Hitlerism in Germany and Fascism in Italy know how to deal with revolutionary propaganda, but that the United States Government is powerless. He advocated legislation to empower the Department of Justice to investigate Communist activities and to deport alien Communists "seeking to overthrow our republican form of government."

Fears Loans to Soviet.

"The Communists are the most skillful propagandists in the world and they have evidently succeeded in selling a gigantic gold brick to American business men by dangling before their eyes a luscious and ripe bait," he continued. "The bait is $1,000,000,000 trade with Soviet Russia. "It is a colossal international hoax, but at the same time a mirage that appeals to the greed and avariciousness of some American business men who expect to dip their hands into the Treasury of the United States freely and sell goods to the Communists at the expense of the American taxpayers."

Host to Attend Opera Opening This Evening

Bargain Week Will Draw Music Lovers From Every Class.

The Capital's first week of bargain grand opera opens tonight in Washington Auditorium.

And it will be grand opera in all its traditional grandeur and extravagance, except for one item—tickets. These are being sold at prices within reach of every music lover's pocketbook—at prices lower than ever before in the history of Capital opera presentation.

Indications last night pointed to a capacity house—6,000 Washington operagoers from all walks of the city's life—by the time the curtain rises for the performance of "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Pagliacci" at 8:15 p. m.

200 Blind to Attend.

More than 200 of the Capital's blind will be in the audience as guests of The Washington Post and the International Opera Co., which is presenting the operas. Arrangements for their transportation to and from the auditorium were made by Ralph Campbell, of the Columbia Polytechnic Institute for the Blind, with the aid of officials of the Henry Annie Hurt Home for Blind, the National Library for the Blind, and blind division of the Congressional Library.

Several hundred members of Almas Temple of Shriners, opera sponsors, headed by Potentate Warren Grimes also will attend. But the great majority of the audience will be Washington Post readers for whom tickets were reserved by this paper at half price.

1,000 More Available.

Owing to an ever-increasing demand for half-price tickets, The Post has reserved 1,000 for each opera in addition to the original reservation of 3,000 to be sold at the same rates of 30, 46 and 54 cents. All these will be on sale during the opera week at the Stieff piano store, 1340 G street northwest. The auditorium box office will be open for seat sales at the opera company prices.

Carmela Ponselle, Metropolitan Opera Company star and one of the principals of the International, arrived in the Capital last night in preparation for her initial appearance in the title role of "Carmen." Miss Ponsell also will be heard in "Aida" as Amneris.

Assisting Miss Ponselle in the "Carmen" role of Don Jose will be Ralph Errolle, well-known tenor of the Metropolitan.

Music Reveals Spurious Bills

Accordion Found on Two Men Spews "Money" in Officer's Lap.

Waco, Tex., Nov. 18 (AP).—Robert Van Wie, city detective, found pleasure in the tones of an accordion he took from two men arrested on charges of passing counterfeit money today.

Music was soothing, but a problem remained. Only one bill was found in possession of the men, Angelo Rich, 40, and Paul Rose, 36, who said they were from Detroit.

A wheeze in the instrument drew Van Wie's attention. He removed one end. Out tumbled $2,350 in currency, which, officers said, was spurious.

Van Wie quoted the men as admitting they had purchased $3,000 in bills in Chicago for 20 cents on the dollar.

Code Wages Criticized By Economic Group

Atlanta, Nov. 18 (AP).—Although terming the NRA "the most gigantic and most benevolent enterprise ever launched in the economic history of our country," the Southeastern Council, an economic organization, today adopted a resolution critizing wage provisions of certain of the NRA codes.

The resolution said a "number of heavy industries, including coal mining, iron, lumber and cotton, are experiencing serious handicaps arising mainly from wage scale adjustments under the codes."

Two Amateur Groups Score In Light Opera

"Pinafore" and "Mikado" Delight Appreciative Audiences.

By Ray C. B. Brown.

No more pleasant medium exists for acquiring stage experience in singing than the light operas of William S. Gilbert and Arthur Sullivan. The young people of Washington are well aware of this, if one may judge from the fact that two amateur organizations, the Estelle Wentworth Opera Group and the American University Musical and Dramatic Clubs, apppeared the same week in "H. M. S. Pinafore" and "The Mikado."

The "Pinafore" production, given Tuesday night in Roosevelt Auditorium under the auspices of the Community Center, brought out an audience primed for enjoyment and encouragement. In that friendly atmosphere confidence quickly expanded and the actors entered into their roles with gusto. Good training was manifest in the singing of the chorus.

Vocal honors of the performance went to Alma Harris as Josephine and J. Raymond Baine as Ralph Rackstraw. Other principal roles were filled by Mildred Sherman (Little Buttercup), Margaret Horn (Hebe), Ira Meyer (Sir Joseph Porter), Elliott Button (Capt. Corcoran), Eugene Stevens (Dick Deadeye), Harry E. Yeide (Boatswain) and Thomas Zepp (Boatswain's Mate).

The gymnasium of American University was filled Friday night when members of the student body presented "The Mikado" under direction of Harlan Randall. Although none of the principals disclosed noteworthy vocal talent, the ensemble was well schooled, and the performance moved with a lively swing. Many encores were demanded by an audience that entered fully into the spirit of the occasion.

In the role of Ko-Ko, Emory S. Bucke carried out the tradition that this part should evoke the most laughter. If his burlesque was occasionally excessive, it was only the exaggeration of a genuine gift for comedic characterization. His colleagues in the performance were Joseph A. Thomas (Nanki-Poo), Richard L. Tuve (Poo-Bah), Robert Parker (Pish-Tush), Helen Shenton (Yum-Yum), Sara Hawbecker (Pitti-Sing), Ruth Martin Simpson (Peep-Bo), Mercedes Rockefeller (Katisha) and Stanley L. Franck (The Mikado).

London Warns Of U. S.-Soviet Trade Results

Defense Measures Seen; Other Capitals Hail Step for Peace.

(Associated Press.)

The American recognition of Soviet Russia was taken yesterday as both a warning and a basis for hopes of peace.

In London and Berlin, notably, business men advised their Governments to look to Russian trade conditions. In Paris the action was called a good omen for peace.

Secretary of State Hull, en route to the PanAmerican Conference in Montevideo, declared that "a badly confused world situation will be improved" by the resumption of diplomatic relations.

Hull Lauds Action.

"The move offers proof of the marked progress possible in all international dealings when there exists such splendid initiative as shown by the President," Mr. Hull maintained.

In London it was said that recognition may stiffen the British determination to curtail Russian imports unless the Soviet government guarantees more purchases from Great Britain.

German business men expressed the belief that German trade may not be benefitted by the rapprochement.

International circles in Geneva called the act one of the widest importance and helpful at this time to a dark political outlook.

Canada Sees Trade Change

Official circles in Ottawa believed Canadian trade would not be immediately affected, although ultimately Canada's trade with the United States, they said, might be influenced in furs and some other articles.

The London News Chronicle said: "It is one more step in the direction of international cooperation at a time when every step in that direction is a clear gain for a hopeful solution in world peace."

The London Herald described the agreement as "a triumph for sanity and common sense."

Miss Alison Reed Wed To Educator in Paris

Paris, Nov. 18 (AP).—Miss Alison Reed, daughter of Joseph A. Reed, of Pittsburgh, was married today to Jean J. Laveda, the son of Mme. Joseph Laveda, in the American Church. The couple will reside in Tours, where the bridegroom is a professor.

Snowbound

30 American Woodsmen Marooned in Canada.

St. Pamphile, Quebec, Nov. 18 (AP). Thirty American woodsmen, caught by a heavy fall of snow, are waiting here for assistance to get back to their homes.

The men were on their way southwest to the Jackman highway in trucks and automobiles after an unsuccessful attempt to find work in northern Maine when a blizzard blocked the roads.

The men have some money and have been given lodging in a hotel until they can find some way to get home. There is no railroad here.

Soviet Elated Over Bullitt's Appointment

Russians and Americans There Alike Pleased With Recognition.

Moscow, Nov. 18 (AP).—Appointment of William C. Bullitt as Ambassador to Russia was received with as enthusiastic an acclaim today as was the news of the resumption of Russo-American relations.

One official, speaking privately, said, "We are happy that Mr. Bullitt is coming, because of all the possibilities President Roosevelt might have selected, he is the only one we know of personally, and we are all fond of him."

No less welcome was the rapproachment to the little colony of Americans resident in Soviet Russia—about 300 engineers, business men, students and their families.

Officials "Resting."

Official Moscow refused to interrupt its regular "rest day" and discuss the new relationship for publication, but newspapers made much of it and printed prominently the texts of the memoranda of President Roosevelt and Foreign Commissar Maxim Litvinoff in Washington.

There was no organized celebration on the part of the Americans here, but, with few exceptions, all expressed themselves as highly elated over the fact that they soon will have their own embassy in Moscow after lacking that facility for protection and advice so many years.

For those who consider Moscow their permanent home, President Roosevelt's action will mean no small saving of money because it no longer will be necessary for them to go abroad to have their passports renewed and to transact other necessary consular business with the nearest America diplomatic representatives.

Other Americans Elated.

There is another group of Americans here who will be even more grateful because of the arrival of an American ambassador.

These are persons who because of technical difficulties, such as the expiration or the loss of their passports, or other complications, are unable to leave the country because of the inability to produce evidence of American citizenship.

To obtain such evidence they must appear personally at the nearest American consulate. This fact creates a vicious circle from which some have not been able to escape because of the absence of a consulate in Soviet Russia.

Mr. Bullitt will be given his choice of at least two imposing buildings, both of which belonged to pre-revolutionary millionaires. One now is occupied by the Soviet Supreme Court, and the other is known as "the house of the Central Executive Committee," where most of the government's official social functions are conducted. The last permanent American embassy in Russia, a rented building in Leningrad, now is occupied by the government trust.

Topping off the enthusiastic acclaim with which Russia greeted the news of United States recognition, the Communist party organ Pravda will say editorially tomorrow: "It should now be clear to everyone that the Soviet union has overthrown all obstacles to its peaceful construction."

First Soviet Comment.

Pravda's editorial will be the first published reaction in Russia to the agreement reached by Foreign Commissar Maxim Litvinoff and President Roosevelt.

"The American President had to fight against many superstitions of the American bourgeois before he succeeded in bringing the question to a successful conclusion," Pravda's editorial says, describing recognition as "the greatest victory in the Soviet policy of peace."

"From the very beginning," says Pravda, "good sense combined with evident political and economical benefits to be derived from establishment of normal relations with the greatest country in Europe and Asia predominated. Opponents of rapprochement were defeated by the rapid development of events. What seems to have been impossible during a period of 16 years was accomplished during a few days."

'Alibi' Witnesses Probed By U. S. in Kidnap Case

St. Paul, Nov. 18 (AP).—United States District Attorney George F. Sullivan said tonight Federal authorities have begun an investigation of alleged "professional alibi witnesses" for Gustav Schafer, one of four defendants in the William Hamm, jr., kidnaping trial here.

May Be Envoy

M. TROVANOVSKY,

former Soviet Ambassador to Japan, who may be Russia's new envoy to this country.

Trovanovsky Seen as New Soviet Envoy

Far Eastern Expert Held Likely Choice for Embassy Here.

New York, Nov. 18 (AP).—Alexander A. Trovanovsky, informed circles learned today, likely will be named Soviet Ambassador to the United States.

Trovanovsky formerly was Ambassador to Japan, leaving Tokyo several months ago for an internal post in Moscow.

It was understood that final determination on Trovanovsky by the Kremlin awaited an indication that he was acceptable to Washington.

Authoritative observers for months have held the view that any recognition negotiations between the United States and Russia would encompass all Oriental angles. In this regard, they pointed out, Trovanovsky's four years' service in Tokyo would stand him and the Soviet Union in good stead in America.

U. S. Communists "Out."

In scanning the Soviet recognition agreements between President Roosevelt and Maxim Litvinoff, these observers came to the conclusion the Communists of America—as far as Russian Marxists are concerned—are left out in the cold.

They specially stressed section four of the foreign commissar's letter on propaganda, which read, in part:

"(It will be the fixed policy of the U. S. S. R.) Not to permit the formation or residence on its territory of any organization or group—and to prevent the activity on its territory of any organization or group—which has as an aim the overthrow or the preparation for the overthrow of * * * the political or social order * * * of the United States, its Territories or possessions."

Refer to Third International.

This, these circles pointed out, relates to the activities of the comintern, the central body of the Third (Communist) International, which has its residence in Moscow.

In view of the "most favored nation" clauses other nations have in treaties with the Soviet government, it was expected that other governments would ask similar guaranties from Moscow.

British Planes Fall In France; 2 Perish

Paris, Nov. 18 (AP).—Two airplanes of an Egyptian squadron of ten flying from England to Iraq fell in flames in northern France tonight, two fliers burning to death. A third plane was forced down by bad weather.

The pilots of the remaining seven planes, ignorant of the accidents, landed their craft at Le Bourget Air Field for an overnight stay.

The two fatally burned fliers were in a plane which fell near Blangy, 16 miles east of Dieppe. The flames set fire to the clothing of a shepherd near whom the plane crashed, but he escaped unhurt.

Truck-Load of Butter Stolen by 7 Armed Men

Chicago, Nov. 18 (AP).—Seven men armed with shotguns and revolvers threatened employes of the Chicago-Cincinnati Freight Co., here tonight and drove away with a truck loaded with 15,000 pounds of butter consigned to the Merchants Creamery Co., Cincinnati.

Soviet Must End Propaganda Bureau, Dr. Walsh Contends

Student of Russia Holds Third International Killed by Pact.

The Soviet government is under "solemn covenant" to end the Third International, in the opinion of the Rev. Edmund A. Walsh, regent of the School of Foreign Service and vice president of Georgetown University. Dr. Walsh has been a student of Russian affairs for many years and was engaged in relief work there.

He said the Communist propaganda organization is housed in Soviet property and has been in continuous existence for 14 years.

"It has a special American section devoted to preparing the overthrow by force of fundamental American institutions," he said. "Stenographic reports of its deliberations are available and its specific program with regard to the United States is a matter of public record."

Dr. Walsh said Stalin is a member of the organization and in 1929 gave specific instructions to an American commission with respect to methods for achieving changes in American social and political institutions.

"There is no return to normal diplomatic relations so long as one of the parties to the contract retains, fosters and protects on its territory a hostile and intransigent organization which is bound by its constitution and statutes to do the very things so clearly outlawed by Mr. Litvinoff in the fourth point of his pledge," Dr. Walsh said.

The pledge to which Dr. Walsh referred is the promise to end propaganda activities.

North Carolina Beat Repeal by 173,284

Raleigh, N. C., Nov. 18 (AP).—Returns from North Carolina's referendum on repeal November 7 were certified by the State elections board today, and showed 120,190 votes for repeal and 293,484 against.

Inflation Held Forerunner Of Disaster for Any Nation

Economist Predicts Fresh Paralysis to Business if Value of Dollar Is Materially Lowered; Farmer Will Not Be Helped.

By Nicholas Roosevelt,

Former Minister to Hungary, outstanding economics writer and cousin of former President Theodore Roosevelt.

[This is the eighth of 10 articles written by Mr. Roosevelt, after a month's tour through the Middle Western agricultural States.]

"I believe in inflation because it is the only sure way of raising the prices of farm products and at the same time reducing the burden of debts and taxation," a Nebraska farmer said to me last month. He echoed the sentiments of most farmers with whom I spoke. Most of them declared that they wanted some sort of "controlled" inflation so as to avoid following in the footsteps of Germany, but none had any specific idea as to how this "control" was to be exercised.

Apart from the question as to whether or not anything but wild inflation would raise the prices of farm products enough to satisfy the demands of those who today call for higher prices, the argument is worth examining because it rests on a number of false premises.

The first of these is that farm prices would go up as fast or faster than the prices of the articles which the farmer has to buy.

Experience in Europe—and, incidentally, here in the United States since we began our present inflation in April—indicates that even though farm prices go up, they do not go up as fast as do the prices of manufactured goods. The reason for this appears to be that it is easier for manufacturers, who are few in number compared to the agricultural producers, to raise the prices of their goods by common consent than it is for the farmers.

Reduces His Income.

Furthermore, they are for the most part better able than the farmers closely to follow shifting values of the currency, and so can avail themselves of the price raising opportunities of inflation more promptly than the average farmers. This is undoubtedly one of the reasons why the prices of many retail articles have gone up since we went off gold.

The net result is that even though the farmer gets higher prices for what he sells, he has to pay so much more for what he buys that his crops bring him in even smaller returns in goods than they used to. In other words, inflation reduces his real income.

The second premise is that, thanks to his increased receipts in paper currency, he can pay his debts more easily. This is the most plausible argument in favor of inflation. But in order to be effective it is necessary that prices rise so much that the margin between what the farmer earns and what he has to buy gives him enough spare cash to pay his creditors. In actual fact his debt paying capacity is increased not in proportion to his total income, but solely in proportion to the size of the balance between the price of what he sells and the cost of what he has to buy.

In other words, if his net profit over and above his expenses is represented by 1,000 bushels of wheat at 75 cents a bushel and under inflation he could sell this net profit for $1.50 a bushel his cash surplus out of which he must pay his debts and his taxes would be doubled. To this extent his debt paying capacity would be greater and the burden of his debt would be eased.

Real Income Decreases.

But, as has been indicated above, experience has shown that during inflation real income decreases, even though the amount of paper money received for what he sells may greatly increase. In other words, although inflation will help certain farmers to pay off their debts, it is by no means a sure alleviation of all debt burdens unless it reaches astronomical figures as it did in Germany and Central Europe when the paper currency became virtually worthless.

The third premise on which so many farmers base their argument that inflation would help them is that it would reduce the farmers' tax burden. On the theory that the increased income will increase the farmer's surplus of cash, it is argued that it will be easier for the farmer to pay his tax bills, just as it will be easier for him to pay his debts. Leaving aside the explanation already advanced to the effect that there is little likelihood that real income can be increased by inflation, the validity of the contention that inflation will make it easier to pay taxes rests on the assumption that taxes will not increase.

What has the experience in Europe shown? That even in case of a wild inflation which virtually wipes out State and national debts and so reduces the real interest charges on these Government obligations, taxes increase as the currency is inflated. The reason is obvious. A large part of all taxes goes for the payment of Government employes of one sort or another. They may be men working on a road or officials of the county, State or Federal Governments.

Taxes Will Increase.

Take the case of a county supervisor receiving $2,500 a year. Suppose that the dollar is inflated so that its real value is the equivalent of 10 cents gold, the real income of this official will be cut to $250. Will he accept such a cut—even if he could live on it? The answer is so clear that it needs no elaboration. If we go in for inflation the inevitable result will be the increase of taxes so as to meet the demands of Government officials of all sorts for a living wage.

The final—and most erroneous—premise of the inflationists is that inflation, by raising prices, would set the wheels of recovery in progress. The fact is that inflation—and even the threat of inflation—produces a momentary increase in business activities because many people want to exchange money for goods, or else believe that the prices which they are offered for what they want to sell assure them of an adequate profit.

This phenomenon we already witnessed when we began our inflation last spring. But as the spread between the prices of farm products and of industrial goods increases the farmers end up by buying less. So also all wage earners or persons living on fixed incomes are able to buy less as prices go up and their incomes fall to keep pace with the increased cost of living.

The net result is a fresh paralysis of business, leading, if the inflation is sufficiently acute, to the virtual ruin of entire sections of the population. Obviously this is no more to the interest of the farmer than it is to the interest of any other producers. In this country inflation will inevitably spell disaster.

In his next article, entitled "What of the Creditors?" Mr. Roosevelt will discuss the effects of inflation on the social structure of the country.

Soviet Accepts Bullitt as U. S. Ambassador

Newly Born Friendship Gets Warm Start; Litvinoff Is Host.

cated in the recognition exchanges will be worked out before Litvinoff leaves in about a week.

Trade discussions involve agreements on credits, tariffs, and methods of repayment. The old problems of "Soviet dumping" and of the Treasury regulation refusing to accept Soviet gold will have to be straightened out.

Huge Purchases Planned.

Since the large Soviet orders which are in the offing involve substantial credits, R. F. C. men probably will sit in on the talks next week. A recent State Department survey shows the Soviets preparing to purchase some $350,000,000 worth of goods here within a year. Former Senator Brookhart, now trade adviser to the A. A. A., has estimated $500,000,000 might be spent in the next few years, if credits are set up.

There is a proposed $75,000,000 R. F. C. credit for a starter, which will be dsicussed at length. Negotiations on this point have been going on intermittently throughout practically the whole life of this Administration. Four million dollars was granted last summer to finance cotton purchases.

Payment in Goods Likely.

Repayment of credits will have to be largely in goods, observers agree. To this end, Litvinoff and his conegotiators probably will explore import possibilities with a view to determining what Soviet exports do not conflict seriously with domestic productions and what amounts of such exports can be comfortably absorbed—and easily spared from Russia.

It is assumed the remainder of Litvinoff's visit will suffice only to lay down principles, with exact details to be worked out in conjunction with Amtorg officials in New York.

Acting Secretary Phillips, in instructing American diplomats on the changed state of Soviet affairs, specified that henceforth Soviet passports should be treated as any others in the matter of visas.

Truce Ordered In Farm Strike

Wisconsin Leaders Expect Final Action at Omaha Meeting Tuesday.

Madison, Wis., Nov. 18 (AP).—A truce to take effect immediately in the farm strike in Wisconsin was voted tonight by directors of the Wisconsin Farm Holiday Association and the Wisconsin Milk Pool.

The truce will suspend picket activities in Wisconsin. Final discontinuance of the strike will depend upon action taken at Omaha Tuesday by the executive board of the National Holiday Association and representatives of the milk pool.

John Bosch, Atwater, Minn., national vice president of the holiday association, who attended the conference today with Walter Singler, president of the pool, and Arnold Gilberts, State holiday president, said the executives probably would call off the strike.

Invalid Lies 3 Days Beside Dead Mate

Charleston, W. Va., Nov. 18 (AP). Lying for three days in her bed unable to move, with the body of her husband sprawled across her feet, Mrs. Dennis Hicks, an invalid, was found in her farm home today by neighbors.

"He sat down like he was tired Thursday," she said. "Right after dark he fell across the bed. After a while I just knew he was dead."

Finally her dogs, crazed by hunger, leaped through a window pane in search of food. The broken window and whining dogs prompted neighbors to investigate.

Two Killed as 1,000 Cubans Attack Guard

Camaguey, Cuba, Nov. 18 (AP). Two workmen were killed and several wounded today when about 1,000 workers attacked the Rural Guard post near the Senado sugar mill in an attempt to liberate two workers who had been previously arrested.

A detachment of soldiers from Camaguey reestablished order.

New York Has Soviet-Ukraine Parade Clash

7,000 Marchers Set Upon by Reds, With Bottles and Bricks Hurled.

New York, Nov. 18 (AP).—A parade of 7,000 Ukrainians, massed here to protest recognition of Russia, made life miserable today for 300 police reserves who tried to settle sporadic street fighting between marchers and Communist groups armed with brickbats and milk bottles.

At the end of the parade and the mass meeting which followed it, five of the marchers' Communist hecklers were in jail charged with felonious assault, three policemen received medical treatment for cuts and bruises, and the Ukrainian standard bearer was taken to a hospital suffering with bruises and pepper in his eyes.

The police, who fought at street corners all along the route of march to keep the warring factions apart, often found themselves set upon by both groups.

The Ukrainian women wore peasant costumes and the men khaki and yellow uniforms which, police said, made them easy marks for the missiles hurled by their opponents who darted out of side streets to attack them.

At the end of the parade, which traveled about 8 miles along the city streets, the Ukrainians adopted a resolution declaring that the famine in the Ukraine was not caused by a shortage in crops, but was "part of a dastardly plot on the part of the Soviet government to deliberately cause the death of millions of Ukrainians" in order to subjugate them.

They also adopted a resolution urging President Roosevelt to "demand from the U. S. S. R. a guarantee that the Ukrainian people within its boundaries will not be persecuted."

AAA Old Stuff, Grins McKelvie

Farm Board Tried It All, Except Loans, Former Member Says.

Lincoln, Nebr., Nov. 18 (AP).—The work of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration—except for the acreage reduction program—was described today as "old stuff" by Sam R. McKelvie, former member of the defunct Farm Board.

"The A. A. A. hasn't done very much we didn't do," said McKelvie. Of the acreage-reduction program he added:

"We didn't have money for that, and tried to persuade the farmers not to plant so much. But the A. A. A. loan program has gone way beyond ours—they've got it over us like a blanket."

The youthful smile that helped to give McKelvie the name of "Boy Governor" of Nebraska a dozen years ago spread over his face as he chuckled.

McKelvie said his experience on the Farm Board convinced him that price fixing is impracticable.

"Only in the utmost emergencies is it justified," he said.

All public peace forces will be combined to guarantee order. Sailors will help guards and armed police in port cities and all government cars and a large number of private automobiles have been requisioned for speedy movement of troops.

Catalonian officials were understood to be taking extraordinary precautions because of reported threats by anarchists and other extremists.

Steel Pay Rolls Show Big Gain In Code Report

Despite Business Slump, Labor's Earnings Rose Far in 90 Days.

The first major disclosure of the effect of codes on big business and labor came yesterday with revelation that the 90-day trial of the steel code has caused 213 of the industry's members to add $9,293,000 and 92,155 workers per month to its pay rolls.

These additions, announced by Recovery Administrator Hugh S. Johnson after they were reported to him by the American Iron and Steel Institute in asking to have the code extended to May 31, were made in the face of sharply curtailed business.

Thus, though the industry pointed out the code was "satisfactory," the benefits all were on labor's side and the industry actually lost money due to code operations. In fact, labor profited to such an extent that, compared with June 17 before the code was adopted, October 14 found wages up 32.1 per cent and employment increased by 28.3 per cent.

The out-of-pocket cost to the industry becomes doubly significant in that between June 17 and October 14 operations dropped from 47 to 44 per cent of capacity.

The industry estimates that on the basis of a normal 60 per cent-of-capacity operation, the increase in wages would amount to more than $100,000,000 annually, and increase employment over the October total by from 125,000 to 150,000 workers.

An important factor disclosed in the institute's report is that "although the code provides that the 8-hour day shall not become mandatory until the industry shall be working at least 60 per cent of capacity after November 1, 1933, nevertheless in order to comply with the wishes of the National Recovery Administration, and in spite of the heavy financial burden occasioned thereby, the industry has, for all practical purposes, eliminated the 10-hour day in favor of the 8-hour day.

Reporting to President Roosevelt concerning 208 of the 213 companies, Gen. Johnson said their employes had numbered 417,000, and pay rolls totaled $37,322,250 in September.

The cost of the code has been partly covered by increasing the price of finished steel by 1.8 per cent and of pig iron by 4.2 per cent between August and November, but, it was pointed out, these figures are not accurate in that they fail to reflect the elimination by the code of concessions under the published prices.

TOMORROW the governing body of the American Legion will take up the matter of restoration of Federal pay. The legion's national executive committee will open a two-day session in Indianapolis, Ind. A major part of its agenda includes three points:

BAKER.

1. Repeal of the 15 per cent Federal pay cuts.
2. Preference for veterans.
3. Reemployment of those Government employes dismissed under the economy act who have Civil Service ratings.

The executive committee handles legislative matters for the legion and meets twice a year—in May and November — between conventions. Each department is represented by one committeeman.

The veterans' preference committee of the District of Columbia Department met last night and gave final instructions to Edward L. Marthill, of Sergt. Jasper Post, national committeeman, to make a strenuous fight to line up representatives of more than 10,500 legion posts behind the Government worker. Mr. Marthill left last night for Indianapolis.

MARTHILL.

The veterans' preference committee is optimistic over prospects of winning active support of more than a million legionnaires over the country in attaining the three points in the District department's program. Representing the 6,500 legionnaires in Washington, the V. P. C. leads the way toward securing cooperation from service men to better the status of the Federal employe. After the V. P. C. began formal action about two weeks ago, other veterans' groups joined in the movement, including the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the Disabled American Veterans.

TWO Navy men and an Agriculture employe have obtained patents on devices.

Howard C. Rule, jr., U. S. N., has invented a viscosimeter, or instrument for ascertaining the viscosity of fluids. The device contains the specimen fluid in an arcuate channel with a stream-line bob arranged at the end of a pointer, which is pivoted to swing over an index. When the bob is released it swins until stopped by the fluid.

John J. Moore, U. S. N., has perfected a superheater for automobile type torpedoes. It also is designed for an improved fuse and pistol arrangement used in such torpedoes, combining the fuse and pistol as one unit.

Edward A. Gorman, Agriculture, has patented an apparatus for circulating air in refrigerating cars. Pressure of the wind outside the car is sufficient to operate a fan, constituting the apparatus.

Chess Director Ernest M. Knapp, Commerce, is the winner of the "Rapid Transit" tournament at the Federal Clubhouse. The time limit of 10 seconds for each move resulted in some unusual situations for the 12 entrants.

Endless.

From what we glean from day to day
Along our Govermental way,
Sometime ago someone turned out
A statement that put peace to rout,
Resulting in both mirth and rage
With endless argument on age.
Although whole volumes have appeared,
No real agreement has been neared,
Because those not so young are sure
No Government would long endure
Unless "old heads" are kept around
To sort o' keep things on the ground.
Those younger, on the other hand,
Are often prone to take the stand
That many folks of 40 summers
No longer are up and comers,
And probably new jobs should be Dispensed to juvenility.

$700 Airplane Query Brings Wide Response

Commerce Official Finds 8 of 10 Asked Would Buy Cheap Ship.

Immediate and enthusiastic response to the plan of the Aeronautic Branch of the Commerce Department to stimulate production of low priced airplanes was reported yesterday by Eugene L. Vidal, director.

In the replies received to letters sent to pilots, mechanics and student pilots, eight out of ten were from persons who said they definitely would become purchasers of a plane at $700.

The letters sent to the prospective purchasers informed them that the aircraft industry could produce a two-seater, low-winged monoplane to sell at $700 provided there was some guarantee of a market for at least 10,000 of the craft.

Vidal declared letters have been received from all parts of the country. Many communications have been received from nonfliers who see in the proposed inexpensive plane a chance to learn to fly.

Nearly all replied they had several friends who would purchase the $700 planes. Some were sure of at least ten prospects, while a flying instructor in the Middle West said he knew of 300.

A New England flying instructor wrote:

"I had 21 students this year. All students were soloed under six hours, and I could sell planes to at least four of them if they could buy a good light plane for $700 or $800 that they could afford to operate and which would be safe to fly. They are my students and friends and they look to me to say what they can buy. And what is there to offer? Not a thing."

"Whatever the results of the survey," Mr. Vidal said, "we will turn over the whole collection of information to the civil aeronautics industry for use by any manufacturer."

THE Senate Banking Committee's "self-liquidating" investigation of Wall Street is evidencing runaway tendencies perplexing even to such avid stock exchange bloodhounds as Senator Duncan U. Fletcher, of Florida.

Chairman Fletcher had set January 1 as a deadline. He wanted to wind up his inquiry next month, call his committee together, and have legislation ready when Congress convenes January 3.

Of course, some continuing body might be set up to keep an eye on the more playful stock exchange boys. The Senate might even name a permanent committee. But that would take legislation. And the Senator was bent on concluding his inquiry with expedition.

That was before Investigator Ferdinand Pecora lost out in the three-cornered melee for District Attorney of Manhattan. Mr. Pecora honestly wasn't anxious for the Manhattan job. Nor is he ballyhooing his candidacy for appointment as United States attorney for New York. Why should he? He is having a good time right where he is.

Maybe that doesn't explain anything but it ought to. All hope of concluding the inquiry by January 1 is now about gone. Senator Fletcher even has abandoned his plan of speeding up hearings to five days a week.

Why? Ask Mr. Pecora! Last week the investigation was extended to stock loans by banks. On tap, and ready for consumption should hearings wax dull, are the brokers' questionnaire, the complex Associated Gas & Electric Co., the closed bank situation in Detroit and Cleveland, not to speak of an encore appearance of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. and J. P. Morgan.

In defense of perpetuation members point to collection of taxes directly traceable to the committee's exposures, and more than offsetting the cost of the inquiry. They point to the $400,000,000 the House Ways and Means Committee hopes to save by plugging tax leaks.

"This isn't only a self-liquidating investigation," Mr. Pecora, himself, tells us. "It will return a handsome profit."

* * * *

But some senators are wondering where it will end. A few have received letters from constituents clamoring for closed bank investigations in cities other than Detroit and Cleveland. They are skeptical about expanding further, lest the inquiry get entirely out of hand.

SPEAKER HENRY T. RAINEY, whose heavy mane is as white as the silver he seeks to remonetize, arrives from the West with fresh hopes for the white money metal.

With all the conviction of the Great Commoner, whom he admired, he traces the world's money troubles to indifference to silver as a money medium.

"Cause of Depression."

"If Bryan's silver policies had been carried out in 1896, there never would have been this depression," he told this reporter.

You could no more dissuade him from that view than you could convince him this administration isn't going to pilot the Nation out of the doldrums.

Speaker Rainey not only thinks he will live to see the day when the Bryan silver policies are vindicated, but he believes he will be presiding over the House when the vindicating is done.

The principal concern of a certain group of Treasury reporters is whether Acting Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morghenthau, jr., is a tea drinker.

A few weeks ago when the President's gold program was in its formative stages, correspondents who cover the Treasury beat sought out the then acting Secretary, Dean Acheson.

For half an hour they cooled their heels in an anteroom. Secretary Acheson, they were informed, was in conference. He was really very busy and could not be disturbed.

Later, one of the more curious reporters made it a point to investigate. Through confidential sources he learned what the acting Secretary was doing. Mr. Acheson was having tea.

Now we know why Tom Heflin has abandoned his quarrel with the Pope and decided to run for the House from his old home district in Alabama.

"The House needs somebody who understands the money problem," he told our confidant on a recent visit to town.

Chief Patronage Dispenser Farley can't get away from it, even after office hours. The other night we observed him hotly pursued into an elevator at a local hotel by a persistent little man who knew what job he wanted and knew who could give it to him. Jim just grinned and said nothing. The genial Postmaster General can take it.

Russia's Foreign Trade.

The need of long-term credits for financing the import requirements of rapidly developing countries with limited export capacity is self-evident. When loans are not available to cover an excess of imports, the only alternative open to a country in this position is to limit its purchases abroad until a balance between its receipts from exports and its outlays for imports is effected.

Russia provides an outstanding example of a nation of this type; her purchases in foreign markets have had to be adjusted to amounts that could be paid for out of the proceeds of export sales, supplemented by such long-term foreign-trade credits as she could obtain.

Russia has had to face an especially difficult financing problem during the current year. On the one hand, she has suffered from the decline in prices of raw materials which constitute her chief exports. On the other, she has been confronted by an unusually large volume of maturing foreign credits which had to be repaid at most inopportune times.

Under such circumstances, Russia could only meet her external obligations on trade account by sharply curtailing her import buying and endeavoring simultaneously to push her exports in the face of falling prices. Her efforts to solve her exchange difficulties by such means have met with success.

Exports declined in value only 12 per cent during the first eight months of the current year, while imports were cut over 50 per cent during the same period. As a result, the trade balance, which had shown an import excess of 147,000,000 rubles during the first eight months of 1932, was converted into a favorable export balance of 68,000,000 rubles during the same period this year.

By thus reversing the trade balance, shipping gold and obtaining a transitional credit of 140,000,000 RM. from German banks, Russia has succeeded in meeting her current obligations promptly and in full, as they fell due. It is said that all but 100,000,000 RM. out of the 700,000,000 to 750,000,000 RM. of credits payable in Germany this year have been met. The total volume of outstanding credits advanced by Germany, which amounted at maximum to about 1,250,000,000 RM., will be reduced to about 750,000,000 RM., it is believed, by the end of this year.

This prompt repayment and progressive liquidation of outstanding obligations has its dark side, however, in the severe decline in the amount of Russian orders placed in German and other markets. Of course, various factors have contributed to this shrinkage, apart from the effect of the repayment of credits.

Political tension probably accounts for some of the shrinkage in Russo-German trade, and the uncertain outlook for Russian export trade is another reason for cautious buying. However, German goods still constituted about 50 per cent of all Russian imports during the first eight months of this year—a slightly larger percentage of the total than in the corresponding period of 1932, when Germany's exports to Russia were almost twice as great.

As a matter of fact, Germany is the only one of the leading trading nations which in recent months has exported any substantial amount of goods to Russia. England is a very poor second to Germany, France is practically out of the running, and Italy and the United States have sold only negligible quantities of goods to Russia during the present year. Our sales for the eight months to September 1 amounted to 11,000,000 rubles, contrasted with the 121,000,000 rubles sold by Germany. We bought even less from Russia than we sold to her—9,000,000 rubles, compared with 60,000,000 rubles bought by Germany, and 50,000,000 rubles by Great Britain.

If Russia had not been able to obtain relatively long-term funds on import account while selling her exports for cash or on short-term credits, her ability to buy abroad would have been further restricted. With a larger volume of credit placed at her disposal for longer periods of time, Russia's foreign purchases not only would be increased, but her dependence upon Germany, which has been the chief source of long-term trade credits, would be lessened.

The Germans realize the opportunities that await nations prepared to deal more liberally with Russia. Consequently, they have been following the negotiations between our government and that of Russia with an eagerness that is far from disinterested, in the belief that recognition would be a prelude to an extension of American credits to finance the purchase of goods by Russia.

Pan-American Problems.

One of the most difficult problems facing the forthcoming conference at Montevideo is the determination of what questions it will consider. The formal agenda was prepared months ago in committee, but it appears evident that discussion of some of the listed topics would be fruitless, while efforts will be made on the floor of the conference to inject additional subjects for consideration.

The program for this seventh Pan-American conference is admittedly too crowded with topics to insure their careful consideration in a comparatively brief session. Upon such general propositions as the rights of women, undisputed points of international law and cultural relations there may be no violent differences of opinion, but economic and financial problems will not be so easily resolved.

Latin-American countries are vitally interested in tariffs and exchange restrictions and the relation of their currencies to the dollar. These subjects, it has been announced, can not be considered by the American delegation. Although debts are not included in the agenda, Mexico has announced her intention of bringing up this troublesome question. Since the obligations of the southern republics are held privately in the United States, Secretary Hull and his associates will have no authority to speak for the bondholders.

A new Pan-American peace plan proposed by Argentina also is expected to be presented to the conference. In view of the failure of other agencies to bring about a reconciliation between Bolivia and Paraguay, various nations have expressed reluctance to consider further experiments in this line while the belligerents show no disposition to submit their differences to established peace machinery.

Cuba is understood to have prepared a broad plan for collective commercial treaties which will be eligible for consideration under agenda topics, as it was submitted to the program committee in Washington. Since then, however, the failure of the London conference and the beginning of negotiations for bilateral reciprocity treaties seem to make it improbable that any general project will be adopted.

The reaction of the conference to the proposal from Secretary Hull regarding the Pan-American highway will be awaited with interest. It has been announced that the United States delegation will ask approval of a survey of the entire route, to be financed from Washington at a cost of $500,000. With the exception of the stretch from Laredo to Mexico City, which is nearing completion, and a piece of road in Panama, only short, scattered sections of the proposed 9,000-mile highway exist.

The Pan-American conference meets in an atmosphere of good feeling that is unusually favorable to harmonious consideration of many topics. The difficulties of reconciling the interests of 21 different nations will make general agreements difficult, but the interchange of ideas and aspirations may readily facilitate negotiation of direct agreements between individual nations.

Arlington Sewer Project.

The voters of Arlington County will pass judgment next Tuesday upon the proposal to issue bonds to finance a county-wide sewer system. It is proposed that the Federal Public Works Administration shall take these bonds, and that 30 per cent of the cost of the system shall be advanced by the P. W. A. as an outright grant. The bonds would run for 30 years. It is believed that an assessment of 38 cents per $100 would amortize the bonds and provide operating expenses.

Arlington County has an area of 21 square miles, and a population of about 30,000. Most of the inhabitants are in the Federal service in Washington. The county is attractive topographically, and its population undoubtedly would increase if the usual city conveniences were available. At present a few community sewers are pouring their contents into local streams, all of which are polluted. The proposed county system would take in all community sewers and dispose of sewage at two modern plants, one near Rosslyn and the other near Four-Mile Run, thus permitting eventual purification of the streams.

This charming suburb of Washington is in great need of a complete sewer system. It already enjoys the advantage of an abundant water supply, which is furnished by the District of Columbia system. With constantly improving highways and comparatively low rental, Arlington County is destined to be heavily populated. With increased population the cost of county improvements would be relatively lessened.

Job Gains Slacken.

A relatively small gain in employment between September 15 and October 15 is reported by Secretary Perkins. The return of 85,000 men to work is indicated. Employment in manufacturing industries was virtually unchanged.

A notable gain was reported by retail establishments. More jobs were provided in the wholesale trade and in a few major industries. But these were offset, to some extent, by a seasonal decline in the canning industry and in the production of automobiles. Strikes are held responsible for the increased unemployment in bituminous coal mining and several other industries.

Secretary Perkins estimates that 2,800,000 workers have found jobs during the seven-month period between March 15 and October 15. This means an average of 400,000 jobs regained per month, which is more than four and a half times the estimated number of new jobs obtained last month. Employment gains are slowing down in spite of the fact that the vast public works program is now creating jobs on a larger scale.

Shorter hours resulting from the adoption of NRA codes also appear to be reflected in the employment gains of last month. Without this influence and the stimulus afforded by public works, a decline might have been registered.

One cause of the slackening in reemployment is the slow movement of goods in retail trade. It is impossible for manufacturers to go on hiring more men and paying more wages when the outlets for their products fail to expand.

Extending Life.

According to records available to the United States Public Health Service, preventive medicine has made encouraging progress in lengthening life in the United States.

In 1800 the average life span in the United States was about 35 years. The Biblical threescore years and ten were accorded only to a few individuals. By the beginning of the twentieth century the average life span had jumped to 48½ years. Today Americans live on the average 58 years. In New Zealand the record for average longevity has been achieved, with an average life span of 68 years.

Much of this progress has been attained by the assaults of modern medicine on bacterial diseases. In 1900 the six leading causes of death in the order of their destructiveness were tuberculosis, pneumonia, diarrhea and enteritis, heart trouble, Bright's disease, apoplexy and cancer. By 1932 the six greatest allies of death had changed considerably in rank. Heart trouble had become the chief foe of life. Cancer had advanced to second place, closely followed by apoplexy. Bright's disease had moved up to fourth place, pneumonia had dropped from second to fifth rank, and tuberculosis had become the tail-ender.

While at the beginning of the twentieth century bacterial diseases were the greatest obstacles in the way of living to a reasonable old age, the principal task of medicine today is to discover some way of preventing the organs from wearing out.

WHEN MONEY GOES BAD.

Recollections of Inflation in Germany.

To the Editor of the Post—Sir: Having been in Berlin during the winter of 1922, when Germany was just beginning her trial of inflation, it would perhaps be well for me to recall at this moment what the practical results of this course were and how it affected the mass of the people.

The mark at that time varied from about 275 to 325 to the dollar. Strange as it seems, with our "hindsight" of eleven years, no one then knew just what to expect. The price today would be about 300, and a day or two later down again to 270 or 280, so that it was quite a fascinating game to guess whether to buy marks today or wait a day or two, when the dollar perhaps would buy more. But I have seen our servants, and every one who received his pay weekly, run out as soon as it was paid on Saturday and buy something, anything — shoes, sheets, a chair, clothes—anything at all—in order to have something, as by Monday morning the money might be worth only half as much. Of course, as every one knows, it afterward went to thousands and then millions to the dollar.

The dollar in those days was stable and the envy of every one, and we were the fortunate dispensers of bounty. In order to make it plain just what this inflation meant to the German people and taking an average price at that time of 300 to the dollar, we can see what the results were.

Two sisters who lived together on an adequate income when the mark began to go down, endeavored to eke out their resources by making children's clothes for the American residents. Soon the mark fell so that they were obliged to take turns staying in bed every other day so that they would not have to eat anything.

These are not fanciful tales, but actual happenings, and tragic facts. Of course, America is not in the same position that Germany was in those days, but it is probable that they, too, never intended things to go as far as they did; but once commenced, it is impossible to calculate how far inflation can go, and a sound dollar would be as great a help and asset as it was eleven years ago.

The firemen not only extinguished the blaze which might well have destroyed the entire building but exercised consideration for the contents, which I feel to be truly remarkable. The fire will probably go down in the department records as one of minor proportions, but it was not a minor thing to me.

MURILLO'S PAINTING.

Facts Concerning Recovery of Stolen Fragment.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: My attention has been called to an editorial in The Post which discusses the theft of a Rembrandt painting, and then alludes to the theft of a part of Murillo's famous painting, "St. Anthony of Padua," which hangs in the Cathedral of Seville. The editorial erroneously states that the elder J. Pierpont Morgan purchased the fragment, not knowing that it had been stolen, and that when he learned the facts he returned the piece to the cathedral authorities.

I am informed that this version of the return of the stolen fragment of Murillo's work is recited to visitors to the cathedral. Since the incident occurred many years ago, and since such an honorable and generous act would have been perfectly natural on Mr. Morgan's part, I can understand how the facts became obscured.

The theft occurred in 1874. At that time my father, William Schaus, was an art dealer at 749 Broadway, New York City. Certain individuals came to him in 1875 and exhibited the fragment, offering it for sale for $250. As a connoisseur he recognized it at once. He accepted the offer and made an appointment with the parties to return the following day. Then he advised the Spanish consul general, who arranged for the arrest of the thieves. When they returned the next day they were arrested with the $250 in their possession. The money was returned to my father. He declined a reward.

The Spanish government proffered its thanks to my father through the Minister at Washington, and King Alfonso XII graciously conferred upon him the title of Comendador in the Order of Charles III. When the fragment was returned to the cathedral there was a public celebration, and the piece was so skillfully replaced in the painting that it is now difficult to detect the fact that it was mutilated.

MISPLACED STATUES.

Columbus Turns His Back on District Visitors.

To the Editor of the Post—Sir: In the eyes of sightseeing travelers with a sense of artistic fitness, some of the statuary which adorns the City of Washington does not always seem to have been well placed. In this respect the statue of Columbus in front of the Union Station is especially noticeable. Columbus has his back turned to the station. Instead of welcoming visitors with open arms, or at least with a hospitable look in their direction, he not only faces the other way, but is hid from view by an unduly elaborated background. The rear of this background, viewed from the station, is blank except for the globe on its top and the two undraped figures, one on the eastern and one on the western side—fifteenth century mariners, perhaps, since each sits astride of what looks like the prow of an antique boat.

One is apt to be puzzled on entering Washington when informed that this is a memorial of the great navigator for whom the District was named.

France's Stock Of Gold Shows Rapid Decline

Continuance of Leakage May Mean Turn From Gold Standard.

The statement issued last Thursday by the Bank of France reveals a further weekly loss of 730,000,000 gold francs. After an uninterrupted series of bad weeks, the gold stock of the country has thus decreased by 2,260,000,000 francs ($88,000,000) since September 1. Is this the beginning of an endless leakage? Is it a sign that France is nearing the point where she must go off the gold standard?

Considering the gold stock alone does not give an exact picture of the situation of the franc. It should be examined in relation to the total liabilities of the Bank of France and the credit structure of the country.

Balance Not Impaired.

As concerns the Bank of France, it should be remembered that each time gold is withdrawn something has to be given in exchange. In fact, since September 1, when gold began to flow out, a shrinkage of 3,300,000,000 francs in the liabilities of the bank has more than compensated the withdrawals of gold. Thus the ratio of the Bank of France, that is to say the proportion of its gold holdings to its total liabilities, has not been impaired and is still at the high record figure of 79.60 per cent. The record figure for the stock of gold is 83,233,000,000 francs ($3,300,000,000). It was reached in November last year. Since then the total drop is 3,200,000,000 francs which, in percentage, represents only 3.8 per cent.

It is interesting to compare this situation with that of the United States during the period that preceded America's withdrawal from the gold standard.

High Peak in 1932.

The United States gold stock, like that of France, reached a high peak of over $5,000,000,000 during the fall of 1932. On March 4, 1933, when large transfers of gold became impossible, the gold holdings had shrunk to $4,300,000,000. In a few months, the United States had lost some $700,000,000, or 14 per cent, of its metal holdings.

If the same proportion were applied to the Bank of France, its total losses of gold would run as high as 12,000,000,000 francs, thus allowing for a further outflow of 9,000,000,000 francs, without causing much trouble. Moreover, this figure corresponds approximately to the amount of foreign capital temporarily invested in France. The withdrawal of these foreign investments has been long expected, and was bound to come in a gold standard system functioning freely. So far, this seems to leave financial authorities undisturbed.

Of course, mere figures prove very little. Until the United States left the gold standard many economists believed the huge American stock of metal was a definite assurance that the country would remain on a gold currency basis.

But the situation of the Central Bank or banks is not the only element of the problem. In the United States the credit structure of the country was so highly developed, in other words the total liabilities of the banks were so great, as not to permit a further outflow of gold. This was the main reason for the embargo on the yellow metal.

Devaluation Desired.

Furthermore the devaluation of the dollar was desired by the great mass of debtors, particularly the farmers, as the only way of getting relief from obligations they could no longer endure.

For the time being it does not seem that fears of this kind will be justified in France. The total liabilities of the French banks and the credit structure of the country are, if anything, underdeveloped.

From the monetary point of view, the recent outflow of gold has been overemphasized. It can not be considered as an actual menace to the stability of the franc. If France goes off the gold standard it will be because of permanent budgetary deficits or unfavorable trade balances. But these are factors the importance of which is felt only in the long run.

Farm Relief Scheme Falters At End of First Six Months

Anvil Chorus Loudest Where Cash Subsidies Fail to Reach.

By Edwin G. Nourse, of the Brookings Institution.

The Government's gigantic agricultural relief program, regarded by the Roosevelt Administration as fundamental to its entire recovery effort, has lately encountered an increasing barrage of criticism. The fact that this criticism comes from two opposite camps is suggestive. At one extreme are those who view the program as spendthrift subsidy to a favored class. At the other extreme are those who regard the effort as totally inadequate.

Between these two camps stand the great majority who admit insufficient comprehension of the undertaking to form an intelligent opinion. The operations of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration are so widespread, so complicated, and so far-reaching in their implications that the average citizen does well to reserve judgment. But if method rather than detail is set forth, the broad outline of the A. A. A. program is readily comprehensible.

The problem begins with the catastrophic fall in agricultural prices. Farm income declined from 15 per cent of the National income in 1920 to only 7 per cent in 1932.

Farm Prices Hardest Hit.

During the depression all commodity prices have slumped, but prices paid for farm products have fallen faster and further than those of manufactured articles. In consequence, the farmer's debt burden, contracted when prices were high, became intolerable. Yet the payment of these debts and the restoration of buying power are important to merchants, manufacturers and other interests.

Appreciation of the national importance of the problem moved the President, immediately after his inauguration, to demand immediate farm relief legislation. The agricultural adjustment act, signed on May 12, left to the Secretary of Agriculture wide discretion in working out both strategy and tactics. But the main objective of the law was clear and explicit—to restore farm prices to a level at which the farmers can meet their debts, retain their properties, and continue to make a living. To effectuate this and allied purposes, the Agricultural Adjustment Administration was set up. It has now had six months of heroic and hectic history.

Initial steps were based on the conclusion that farm prices could not be raised to a satisfactory level without large-scale adjustment of supply to demand. There were huge surplus stocks of cotton, wheat, pork products, butter and many other agricultural commodities. Moreover, prospects pointed to a record-breaking cotton crop this season.

10,000,000 Acres Barren.

The first drive, therefore, was to secure the reduction of about one-quarter of the cotton-producing acreage. This has involved compensating payments to the planters totaling approximately $110,000,000. The result has been withdrawal from cultivation of nearly 10,000,000 acres of cotton lands.

The second attack of the price-breaking surplus was directed at the hog market. This resulted in the slaughter of some 6,000,000 young pigs and nearly 250,000 sows that would have farrowed this fall. Here benefit payments have been something over $35,000,000, and the program has provided 100,000,000 pounds of pork for relief purposes.

There also has been a relatively small plow-up of cigar leaf tobacco, with benefit payments to the value of about $1,200,000. This month a start has been made in payment to wheat growers who have signed contracts to reduce production in 1934. Up to November 11, these wheat payments totaled $215,688, divided among six States.

45,000,000-Acre Cut Seen.

The case of wheat illustrates how the initial steps are now developing into a general campaign to hold 1934 agricultural production to a volume which will command remunerative prices. Farmers are being signed up on contracts to reduce next year's wheat acreage by 15 per cent, corn acreage by 20 per cent, and hog production by 25 per cent. There will be a further substantial reduction of cotton acreage. Also in process of development is an extension of the first acreage-reduction plan for tobacco. Other curtailments may be added.

All in all, next season's acreage reduction will amount probably to at least 45,000 acres, or an area approximately equal to that of the entire State of Missouri. The ultimate compensation involved can not be definitely calculated yet. In the case of wheat it will amount to something over $102,000,000. For the corn-hog reduction, $350,000,000 is the estimate. It is anticipated that the Treasury advances necessary to make these payments will be covered by the "processing taxes," which are in effect sales taxes on goods of agricultural origin.

Another principal aspect of the A. A. A. program is the promotion of marketing agreements. These have been most extensively applied in the field of fluid milk marketing. The milk agreements include three parties—the organized producers, the distributors and the Secretary of Agriculture. They are designed to assure adequate returns to producers and to regulate selling charges. In general, the milk agreements rely on plans for the regulation of supply previously worked out by the cooperative associations.

Credits Brought Into Play.

In most other commodities producers are not a party to the marketing agreements, and in those other commodities the agreements are correlated with production control plans already set up by the A. A. A., or planned for the future. In one or two cases supply has been controlled by setting quotas for producers or processors.

A consumers' counsel in the A. A. A. scrutinizes all marketing agreements to see that the interest of the consumer is not forgotten.

Finally, there has been an effort to use credit to buttress the other price supporting activities of the A. A. A. This has taken the form of export credits on wheat for the Orient and of domestic credits on cotton and corn. By lending 10 cents a pound on cotton and 45 cents a bushel on corn, the Government practically pegs prices of those commodities at these levels. It has been suggested that the practice may be extended to other products.

Price Levels Lifted.

In considering the results of these measures, the following table is helpful. It shows that the general index of farm prices as a group (1910-14 level equals 100) rose to a high point in July. Since then it has dropped off to a rather stable level around 70 per cent of the prewar figure.

Month in 1933	Prices of Farm Products	Prices of Commodities Bought by Farmers	Ratio of Prices Received to Prices Paid
March	50	100	50
April	53	101	52
May	62	102	61
June	64	103	62
July	76	107	71
August	72	112	64
September	70	116	60
October	70	116	60

While the rise in the average price of all farm products has been pronounced, the improvement has been by no means evenly distributed. Commodities which have benefited most include cotton wheat and tobacco. Dairy products, hogs and corn have gained comparatively little, which accounts for the fact that agricultural discontent has lately become acute in the live stock and dairy sections of Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin and adjoining States. In order to judge of the financial gains derived by any section, however, we must look not only at market prices, but also at the benefit payments already listed.

Cash Serves as Balm.

Wherever such payments have been made in substantial amounts, as in the cotton belt, farmers have been consoled not merely by increased prices for their products, but also by the soothing shower of A. A. A. checks. Dissatisfaction is chefly limited to the sections where price improvement has thus far been slight and where benefit payments have as yet been only moderate in amount.

There is, however, another important factor in the situation, clearly revealed by the table above. This is the slight recession of farm prices from their midsummer peak, when speculative enthusiasm was rampant, aggravated by the fact that prices of things the farmer has had to buy have continued to advance.

The diminishing pockets of agricultural discontent are found in areas where farmers have felt the pinch of rising prices for what they buy, without as yet receiving either crop reduction benefits or increased purchasing power for what they sell.

Man Dragged in Alley, Robbed and Slugged

After robbing Harry Bricker, 55, of 3112 Fourteenth street northwest, of $40, three colored men last night struck him with a pistol on the back of the head in an alley off W street northwest, near North Capitol street.

Bricker staggered into a store at 2200 First street northwest and the proprietor called a policeman and an Emergency Hospital ambulance. He told police he was attacked and dragged into the alley.

Central Point For Transient Relief to Open

Camps for Men and Boys in District Program for Unemployed.

A centralized station for the care of transient unemployed in the District of Columbia will be opened tomorrow at John Marshall place and C street, it was learned yesterday.

The station will be in charge of Arthur Rosichan, director of transient relief for the District. Mr. Rosichan has been making preparations for several weeks to care for men as well as women and children.

He has been working on a relief program which may include the establishment of camps for men and boys. One of the places under consideration for these camps is old Fort Hunt, said to be in good condition and virtually ready for occupancy.

Mount Weather Site.

Another site receiving serious consideration is the property owned by the Agricultural Department, known as Mount Weather, 55 miles northwest of Washington. Buildings on Mount Weather contain 59 rooms, with ample space for housing men.

A report submitted to Morris Lewis, director of transient relief for the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, indicates there also are 30 or 35 acres of arable land at Mount Weather.

The District concentration point for transients already has been caring for women and children with the help of the Salvation Army and two local union lodging houses, it was stated. The new center will provide for men as well as women and children.

Station in Operation.

It is also planned to open an automotive school for youths who will be quartered at the transient center. The preparation of a tract near Washington owned by the Agriculture Department as a concentration camp and farm for transient boys also is under consideration.

For the purpose of keeping transients busy and earning money, insofar as possible, the Public Health Service has suggested to relief authorities a campaign against rats in the District.

Insull Seeking Start in Greece

Considers Raising Cash, Interesting People in New Enterprise.

Athens, Greece, Nov. 18 (AP).—Samuel Insull said today he was continuing his efforts to establish himself in business in Greece, but denied a report in an Athens paper that he had bought lignite mines in the Island of Euboea.

Asked whether he was interested in some other business, he replied: "Oh, yes; I still have a few friends. At present I am examining possibilities of getting capital together and people interested."

He added he was leaving his hotel and taking an apartment in anticipation of Mrs. Insull's return from Venice.

The Athens Appeal Court recently refused the United States Government's second request for Insull's extradition to face charges in connection with the collapse of his utilities interests in the United States Middle West.

Southern Rush Of Transients Brings Action

U. S. Establishes Camps to Halt Great Flow Into Florida.

With the annual migration of transients from cold northern States to Florida assuming alarming proportions, Federal relief authorities are hastening the establishment of a chain of concentration points extending from Washington to Miami.

A survey of the situation received by Morris Lewis, director of transient relief for the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, revealed that as early as September 8,000 transient men, women and children had gone to Florida. Since that time the number has been increased, but a concerted effort is being made to check the flow southward.

Mr. Lewis said yesterday that concentration points have been set up at Richmond and Norfolk, Va.; Columbus, Charleston, Columbia, Florence, Greenville and Greenwood, S. C.; Atlanta, Macon, Savannah, Augusta and Columbus, Ga. Numerous concentration points also are to be established as soon as possible in North Carolina.

Ample funds will be advanced next week to Florida to care for the needy transients already concentrated in the State. These people are quartered at Jacksonville, Orlando, Lakeland, Tampa and Miami.

'Wishing Chair' In Ireland Fails Hockey Players

Touring Team of America Beaten at Dublin, Gives Up Superstition.

By Ware Torrey and Janet Owen.

With the American Touring Field Hockey Team, Swansea, Wales, Nov. 3 (By mail).—The entire United States touring field hockey team, one by one, sat in the wishing chair at the Giants Causeway on the tip north point of Ireland, on Sunday, and the gods of superstition let them down.

It is to be supposed that under the ordained veil of secrecy each wished for victory over all-Ireland. It is to be concluded that the gods decided that was a selfish wish, since America had just defeated the North of Ireland the day before. On Wednesday, October 31, all-Ireland defeated America, 0-0, 2-1. The American team has sworn off superstition.

The all-Ireland match at Dublin, after the distinctly good showing made at Belfast against Ulster, was a disappointment in many ways. The field, just outside of town, was somewhat lumpy and kept in a semimuddy state by intermittent dribbles of rain throughout the match.

Thaete Given Rest.

The line-up was the one originally announced for the Ulster match, with Barbara Strebeigh playing left wing and many other changes from the normal order of things. At Ulster it finally was decided to give Thaete a rest, and Strebeigh was needed in the half-back line. Her experimental placement as wing forward thus was brand-new when the team took the field against Ireland.

For 35 minutes the Blue and Green opponents drove up and down the field, neither achieving a score. American passes were not working and Ireland held most of the play in American territory. Their stronger grip was partly due to the fact that they were faster on their feet on the uncertain ground. The Irish wings were exceptionally fast, and the Green as a whole kept better control of the ball.

Behind the indecisive Blue forward line the backs held out stanchly. Frances Elliott, America's goalkeeper from Philadelphia, played her most brilliant match of the tour. The Irish were wild in their shooting, but they dominated the offensive sufficiently to keep the goal under dangerous, if erratic, fire. Elliott's courage, cleverness and persistency prevented a pile-up of Irish score.

Anne Townsend showed her usual mastery in captaining the defense into a holeless wall. With strong help from Barbara Black, of New York, and Tommy Pierce, the defense sent the ball again and again upfield despite Green territorty, but the forwards failed to control their parries and passes well enough to reach the shooting area.

The half ended at 0-0.

Quick Pass Aids Score.

After 10 minutes' similar play in the second period Ireland managed to maintain a fast enough scrimmage at the right side of the American goal finally to score by a quick pass to the extreme left and angle shot from there. Five minutes later they tried the same play, that time sending the shot from the left too fast for any goal-kepeer to turn and reach. The backs at that moment were still drawn to the right, and there was nothing to save the second Irish score.

Virginia Vanderbeck and Betty Cadbury, Philadelphia forwards, led the attacking line in a sudden spurt of speed and incisiveness. A pass from the captain after a penalty corner was taken by Kitty Wiener, center forward, and sent on to Vanderbeck.

Vanderbeck dodged her way through a knot of Irish defense to the circle and sent through one of the hard straight shots which have become characteristic of her on the tour. It surprised the Green goalkeeper, and America had its score.

During the three minutes that remained of the match the Old Blue rose to better individual control. Forward line passes and passes from the backfield were still not working well enough to enable a tying of totals until the last minute of play when the whistle stopped Cadbury from a clean hit in the circle through an unmissable opening.

Vanderbeck and Cadbury scored America's two goals in the first half at equal intervals of about 10 minutes in the Belfast game.

Footing Insecure.

Opening the second half with a 2-0 lead, the Old Blue backfield appeared at once to be somehow off-balance. One explanation was that their end of the field that half was quite bare of grass, and a light shower between periods had made footing suddenly insecure. Whatever the cause, in that short time of slackened strength the Ulster forwards succeeded in breaking through twice to score.

The team was in too good form that day to let the challenge of a tied score after the take-off they had had go unanswered. They turned the attack into Irish territory, kept the goal repeatedly under fire, and finally through a brilliant shot from way at the side by Vanderbeck broke the tie and carried the match 3-2.

America can look upon its field hockey tilts with Ireland as of this season with satisfaction. At Copenhagen the Old Blue defeated the Green, 3-1; at Belfast, Ulster, 3-2 with more of a margin of good play than the score shows, and at Dublin, suffered its one loss, 0-0, 1-2, with a third of its normal line missing.

NRA Code Fails With Turkeys; Thanksgiving Will Be Cheaper

Other Fowl Costing Less Than Last Year in District.

Gobblers haven't signed an NRA code yet, and so the price of turkey this Thanksgiving is expected to be cheaper than last year.

Turkeys are now selling in Washington as low as 25 cents a pound dressed and 20 and 21 cents alive. This is from 3 to 5 cents cheaper than last year. Two years ago they brought 45 cents and five years ago 55 to 60 cents.

Estimating the capacity of each of the 310,000 members of the Civilian Conservation Corps at about one and a half pounds of turkey, plus the usual "fixings," the Government has arranged to buy 30,000 medium-sized Thanksgiving fowls for them.

The Army will buy an additional 17,500 turkeys, the Navy 7,000, and the Marine Corps 5,000 for their own men.

Chickens, second choice on Thanksgiving, are selling from 14 to 19 cents a pound for the average with a top price of 28 cents for the best grade. This is 2 to 3 cents under last year's prices.

Ducks and geese are selling for 14 to 16 cents, or 1 to 2 cents cheaper than last year, while capons sell for 35 cents.

Gov. Horner planned a third special session to consider a long list of other issues upon which legislative action has been asked.

The legislators will have less than two weeks to consider liquor legislation before the formal repeal of prohibition.

The governor decided to exclude other subjects from the call so that liquor legislation might receive the undivided attention of the members.

U. S. Statistics Now Censored, Says Sanders

Deletion in Reserve Bank Bulletin Cited by G. O. P. Leader.

(Associated Press.)

The Roosevelt Administration was charged yesterday by Chairman Everett Sanders, of the Republican National committee, with "censoring" Government statistics.

Sanders said this was shown by the absence from the Federal Reserve Bulletin for November, issued Friday, of the regular monthly summary of business conditions. In its place was printed a portion of a speech delivered by President Roosevelt October 22 discussing the recovery campaign.

"The fact that this data is suppressed," the chairman added, "may lead the casual observer to wonder just how far the NRA and the Administration back of it would go to prevent free comment and honest interpretation upon political events if they had control of the press of the country as they do have control of this Government publication."

Sanders also gave notice that he will continue to issue statements attacking the Democrats "as long as they do things that should be attacked."

Replies to Attack.

He expressed this determination in commenting on a letter written him by Prof. Albert Levitt, an independent Republican of Connecticut, criticizing the recent issuance of a pamphlet entitled "Let's Look at the Record."

Levitt, appointed several months ago as special assistant to Attorney General Cummings, told Sanders he owed "an apology to the Republican voters of the country" for publishing the pamphlet.

"Levitt is not a Republican," Sanders said. "In Connecticut he ran for governor in an effort to defeat the Republican candidate. He is now an officeholder of the Democratic administration.

"He complains that the pamphlet contains statements that are untrue. He fails to point out any. As long as there is need for calling attention to Democratic errors we shall continue to issue statements."

Discussing the Reserve Bulletin, Sanders recalled that the Bulletin for October aroused the ire of Hugh S. Johnson, the NRA administrator, to such an extent that "he demanded first the withdrawal of the Bulletin and then a repudiation" of a statement it contained.

Sees Citizens Concerned.

This statement was that a decline in industrial activities during August and September "has been most marked in industries in which processing taxes or codes have been recently effective."

"Those who rely upon Government statistics to obtain correct information regarding economic conditions," Sanders said, "are concerned over a move of the 'New Deal' Administration

"All of the statistical agencies of the Government have been brought under the control of the President's central statistical board, the head of which is Mr. Winfield W. Riefler, the mysterious 'interpreting economist' of the White House.

"Students of economics are disturbed over this move to have all Federal data submitted to this board for its approval. The implications are most serious."

Military Order Observes 86th Anniversary.

Secretary Dern of the War Department, Assistant Secretary of Navy Roosevelt and Maj. Gen. Benjamin H. Fuller, commandant of the Marine Corps, last night addressed the Aztec Club of 1847, Military Order of the Mexican War, at the Army and Navy Club.

Others who made short talks were Bishop James E. Freeman; John Collins Daves, president of the General Order of the Society of Cincinnati; Ralph P. Barnard, governor of the District Society of Colonial Wars; Dr. Thomas E. Green, president of Sons of the Revolution in the District; Maj. Gen. Amos A. Fries, president of the American Revolution in the District; Graham H. Powell, vice commander of the District Commandery of the Loyal Legion; Maj. Gen. William E. Horton, commander of the Military Order of the World War in the District; and Harris E. Starr, president of the District Society of the Order of Founders and Patriots of America.

The dinner was in observance of the 86th anniversary of the club, which is composed of the oldest sons or nearest blood relatives of commissioned officers who served the United States in the Mexican War. Music was furnished by the United States Marine Band.

Ickes Denies Bar Of Michigan Work

Says He Will Investigate "False Statements."

Branding as "ridiculous, absurd and untrue" reports that he had said Michigan should not or would not be permitted full participation in the public works program, Administrator Ickes yesterday declared he has started a full investigation of the way in which "false statements" have been attributed to him.

"Last week I called for a special report to show if there was any possibility of the Federal Public Works Administration aiding Michigan in its problems," he said. "I have also asked various Michigan officials to find ways of overcoming Michigan's self-imposed local regulations which are curtailing more widespread participation in the P. W. A. program."

These regulations, Ickes said, are a matter of local decision.

The 97th Senator's Diary

Monday, Nov. 13.

Three years ago the Senate and the country gave loud cheers when the voters of Alabama and South Carolina decided to retire Tom Heflin and Cole Blease to private life. But while the Alabamans and South Carolinians were thus exhibiting their return to political sanity, their neighbors in Louisiana and North Carolina went "haywire." Louisiana gave Huey Long to the Nation and North Carolina contributed Bob Reynolds. The gains in Alabama and South Carolina were canceled.

Huey and Bob lost no time in discovering that they were kindred spirits. Their exchange of greetings when they met for the first time in the Senate was about like this:

Long—It seems to me that I've met you somewhere before.

Reynolds—Yeah, and it seems to me that I've met you somewhere before.

Long—I think I remember now. It was years ago, and you were running a skating rink in Baton Rouge.

Reynolds—That's right. And now I remember about you. You were selling patent medicine from the rear end of a wagon.

Long—That's right.

They shook hands, and a strong bond of personal and political friendship sprang up between them. Bob is nearly always on Huey's side when important issues come to a show-down in the Senate. They are a formidable pair among the statesmen from Dixie. As rabble-rousers, they have been worthy successors of Heflin and Blease.

Tuesday, Nov. 14.

But now the evidence is unmistakable that both of them are slipping. An aroused public opinion in Louisiana is bringing to bear upon Huey pressure such as he has never had to resist before. The storm is growing. More damaging by far than the political charges brought against him in Louisiana is the ridicule to which he has been subjected since his adventure in a Long Island club last summer. To be laughed at is ruinous to a Kingfish. And that is what many of his constituents are doing now. Some of them have even gathered up courage enough to rotten-egg him. Huey's "reign of terror" seems to be drawing to an end.

Bob Reynolds' prestige likewise has suffered considerably. The Tarheels are complaining because Reynolds went off to Russia last summer instead of attending to chores at home, particularly the important business at the Jim Farley pie counter. Last year Reynolds ran on a prohibition repeal platform and won overwhelmingly. This year he undertook the role of chief spokesman for the repeal movement in North Carolina, and the drys carried the State, 2 to 1. He was badly beaten in his own precinct. His reverse as the repeal spokesman gives color to the explanation that his large majority last year was due chiefly to the unpopularity of his opponent, Cameron Morrison. All in all, Bob Reynolds' political prospects are far from promising.

Wednesday, Nov. 15.

Cameron Morrison, by the way, is striving desperately to stage a comeback. He would give a king's ransom to get back into the Senate, from which he was so rudely ousted by Bob. Reynolds. He made speeches—and very effective ones I am told—on the dry side of the argument in North Carolina. Apparently his bone dryness is not a handicap, but there seems to be other insuperable obstacles to his return to the Senate.

Thursday, Nov. 16.

Repeal of the eighteenth amendment has turned out to be a "lifesaver" to at least three dry "lame-duck" statesmen, whose retirement from public life was due largely to the fact that they continued to vote for prohibition long after it had lost favor with their constituents. They are former Senator "Jim" Watson, of Indiana; Wallace Dempsey, former Congressman from New York, and Frank Clark, a former Representative from Florida. Although they ardently supported prohibition while they served in Congress, they are now lending all their energy and talents to promoting the National Beverage Dealers Association, organized to protect the interests of the handlers of liquor after repeal becomes legally effective.

Mr. Clark is president of the organization; Mr. Dempsey is general counsel, and Jim Watson is lending his influence to its success in an associate capacity. They were old cronies in Congress before they retired with the consent of their grateful constituents.

The beverage dealers' association is one of several organizations newly created as a consequence of the approaching resumption of the legalized liquor trafic. According to Mr. Dempsey, it has a twofold purpose: First, the work for moderate taxes, on the ground that if the taxes are too high, either at the distillery or at the ultimate distributing point, the moonshiner and bootlegger will continue to flourish; and second, to conduct the sale of liquor in such a creditable manner that there will be no revival of sentiment for prohibition.

Every one, I am sure, will commend these aims. Certainly no one will dispute me when I say that the organization deserves the highest praise for furnishing this unusual opportunity for three distinguished statesmen to continue serving their country.

Saturday, Nov. 19.

"Jobs!" exclaims Huey Long. "I wish we didn't have any to give out. For every man we give a job we make at least nine enemies."

This passionate outburst before the Senate Investigating Committee finds a sympathetic throb, I am sure, in every understanding political heart. It is old stuff, of course, but it is just as true today as it ever was. Jim Farley can be called as the first witness to give expert testimony about it. The strange part of it is that, although all smart politicians—if any—know it to be true, they are just as eager as they ever were to push their way to the pie counter.

A.A.A. Answers Hospital Milk Price Charges

Denies Cost Has Doubled Where Agreements Are in Effect.

Striking back at statements attributed to the NRA Consumers Advisory Board that the price of milk to hospitals had doubled in cities where Agricultural Adjustment Administration agreements prevail, the A. A. A. issued a statement yesterday setting forth price rises in five of the principal cities.

"The policy of the A. A. A. is to encourage price concessions to bona fide public relief agencies by associations or producers, distributers and processors, which are parties to regional milk shed agreements," the statement read.

"Reports that prices have doubled under the wholesale milk schedules which prevail for hospitals, in localities where no additional specific or general concessions are given them by the local parties to the agreements, are wholly without foundation of fact.

"The policy of the administration is to leave Federal relief agencies and other similar agencies free to deal with the situation in each community, and therefore the administration is unwilling to tie such agencies' hands by sponsoring a fixed schedule for relief purposes."

Several of the agreements accepted by the A. A. A., the statement explains, provide that "distributors may sell to any recognized public unemployment relief agency or to any welfare charity at less than the prices named in the schedule."

Some of the increases in wholesale prices under the agreements listed by the A. A. A. are: Boston, 33 to 36 cents a gallon; Baltimore, 25 to 32 cents; Detroit, 25 to 32 cents; Knoxville, 25 to 32 cents.

Banking Probe To Be Speeded

Senator Fletcher Declares Inquiry Should End Before Jan. 1.

Dissatisfied with progress in the Senate's investigation of Wall street, Senator Duncan U. Fletcher announced last night he will attempt to wind up Chase National Bank hearings this week in an effort to bring the investigation to a close before the first of the year.

"There is no need for dragging this inquiry out too long," the Senate Banking Committee chairman said. "We should be able to get at the essential facts and still complete the investigation before Congress convenes.

Ferdinand Pecora, committee counsel, before he left for New York, Friday, indicated the Chase hearings may last two more weeks, and the investigation proper extend well into January.

Associated Gas and Electric Co. officials have not yet been heard and investigators still have to report on their stock market questionnaires and the Cleveland and Detroit closed bank situations.

Hearings wil be resumed Tuesday.

U. S. Acts to Deport Hundreds to Russia

Survey Started on 642 Outstanding Cases.

One of the first acts of the Federal Government yesterday after announcing recognition of Soviet Russia was to order completion of a survey of 642 outstanding warrants calling for deportion of Russians classed as undesirable aliens.

The deportations have been held up for periods extending as far back as 1927, Col. Daniel W. MacCormack, Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, said.

Outstanding warrants prior to November 1, 1927, will not be known until reports of field officers are received, he said.

MacCormack said the problem of executing the warrants immediately has not been considered. A decision will not be made until the survey report has been submitted to Secretary of Labor Perkins.

The Federal Government has been unable to deport Russians because no passports could be issued for them.

The two doctors claim Mrs. Britton died from complications and assert they will produce a number of patients who have been cured by their treatment.

Brief Funeral For Vanderbilt

Father Sits Beside Body of His Only Son at Services.

New York, Nov. 18 (AP).—The body of William K. Vanderbilt, jr., lay in a silver coffin in St. Thomas' Church today under a blanket of spring flowers.

Beside the body of his only son, killed Wednesday in an automobile accident in South Carolina, sat William K. Vanderbilt, motionless through the brief Episcopal funeral service in the Fifth avenue church. His first wife, Mrs. Graham Fair Vanderbilt, the young man's mother, also occupied a fornt pew.

Mr. Vanderbilt entered the church with his daughter, Mrs. Earl E. T. Smith, the former Miss Consuelo Vanderbilt. Young Vanderbilt's other sister, Mrs. Henry Delafield Phelps, the former Miss Muriel Vanderbilt, was on her way from Carmel, Calif., but failed to arrive in time for the service.

A boys' choir sang "Swift to Its Close Ebbs Out Life's Little Day," and a male soloist sang the stanza "I Loved the Garish Day" from "Lead Kindly Light."

Ten friends of young Vanderbilt ushered the mourners to the pews.

Mormon Tabernacle's Senior Organist Is Given Post Here

EDWARD F. KIMBALL,

of the Mormon Tabernacle in Salt Lake City, who will give evening concerts, six nights a week, at the Washington Church of Latter Day Saints.

Kimball Will Have Charge of Church's Musical Activity in D. C.

Edward F. Kimball, who for 28 years has held the position of senior organist at the Mormon Tabernacle in Salt Lake City, has been assigned by the president of the Church of Latter Day Saints to take charge of musical activities at the Washington chapel of that organization. As Mr. Kimball is a musician of National reputation, his appointment to this new post will arouse widespread interest.

In the marble chapel at Sixteenth street and Columbia road, a large pipe organ recently has been installed, with the pipes concealed in the spire. Under Mr. Kimball's regime as director of music, he will be at the console of the new organ at 7 o'clock each evening, except Sunday, in a recital open to the public.

Programs on Radio.

Through the facilities of radio, Mr. Kimball's programs in Salt Lake City have been heard throughout the United States for several years. He is one of the best-known American organists, and his musicianship has been attested by the successes of his long career.

At the age of 16, Mr. Kimball was director of music in a Western university. Ambitious for a wider field he resigned his post to study piano with Alberto Jones. Later he went abroad to study organ with Walter Fischer in Berlin, and returned to New York for further tuition from R. Huntington Woodman.

Mr. Kimball has accompanied the Tabernacle Choir on concert tours through 16 States, acting as organist and assistant conductor. He gave a series of recitals at the Lewis and Clarke Exposition in Seattle, and has served as official organist at several Rotary international conventions.

Authority on Music.

As a choral director, he brought into prominence the Mendelssohn Chorus and the Sewanee Singers, two Utah organizations of male voices. He is also recognized as an authoritative musicologist, having contributed papers on religious music to many periodicals. At present he is the editor for the church music committee.

In his recitals at the Washington Chapel Mr. Kimball will play programs of general interest, and requests for particular compositions will receive consideration. It is his hope that these hours of music may become a source of solace and edification to all who attend them.

Eastern Shore Citizens Argue Against Bridge

Loss of District Market Cited if Span Crosses Near Baltimore.

Easton, Md., Nov. 18 (Spl.).—That freight and passenger traffic to Washington will suffer materially if the proposed Chesapeake Bay bridge is built from a point near Baltimore to a point on the Eastern Shore at Tolchester Beach, in Kent County, is the opinion of members of the Talbot County Chamber of Commerce and other Eastern Shore citizens opposing the project.

In a letter sent to Baltimore by a leading local citizen the statement is made that the bridge would put the present ferries out of business. During the season many trucks laden with asparagus, strawberries and broiler chickens travel from Lower Delaware and the Eastern Shore of Maryland to Washington by way of the Claiborne ferries, each ferry carrying from 7 to 20 trucks. The Nation's Capital is said to be a better market for this produce than Baltimore. Prices are better and demand is more brisk, truck farmers assert.

Furthermore, it is asserted, more District of Columbia license plates are seen on the Eastern Shore ferries than Maryland tags, showing a preponderance of Washington traffic to and from the Eastern Shore on the lower Shore ferries. If the bridge be erected at the point suggested, many Shore residents contend, Washingtonians will be compelled to drive to Baltimore and then around the upper Kent County area in order to reach the lower Shore or Delaware resorts and counties, since the ferry systems might be eliminated entirely by the bridge.

The suggestion is made that the State take over the ferry systems as a part of the State roads system, reduce fares and make the service more frequent at Claiborne and Matapeake. Another ferry line from Matapeake to Sandy Point, near Annapolis, is also suggested, together with an alternate suggestion of a bay bridge from Sandy Point to Kent Island at Matapeake, within easy reach of District motorists desiring to proceed to Philadelphia by way of the Eastern Shore.

Chestertown, Md., Nov. 18 (Spl.). Urging Gov. Ritchie to act in favor of the Chesapeake Bay bridge project, the Chestertown Rotary Club, through its secretary, Everett S. Lambden, has addressed a letter to the Maryland executive stating that the project is the most desirable ever proposed for the State; that its construction would provide employment to a large number of men and that the bridge should be a part of the State roads system.

The letter, copies of which have been sent to the Baltimore Association of Commerce, the Baltimore Rotary Club, the State Roads Commission, E. Brooke Lee, member of the commission; State Senator S. Scott Beck, of Kent County, and Delegate Arthur Brice, of Kent County, reads in part as follows:

"We are unanimously of the opinion that the Chesapeake Bay bridge is the most desirable and beneficial project that has ever been proposed for the State of Maryland.

"In view of the importance of this matter at the present time preceding the extra session of the legislature, we desire to express the hope that you will use your influence with the Public Works Administration to the end that the formal contract shall be so drawn that no later objection can be raised and the much desired project can be brought to a happy consummation."

Reich Celebrates Birth of Luther

Berlin, Nov. 18 (AP).—Nazi Germany, accustomed to demonstrations on a gigantic scale, promised to outdo herself tomorrow in an impressive festival commemorating the birth of Martin Luther.

Throughout the Reich church bells pealed tonight as a forerunner of nation-wide exercises in all Protestant churches, national and ecclesiastical flags were displayed and newspapers published messages by President Von Hindenburg, Foreign Minister Van Neurath, Reichs Minister Mueller and others.

Federal Limit Urged in Slum Clearing Work

Competition With Trade Argued by National C. of C. Board.

While Secretary Ickes, Public Works Administrator, was announcing organization of the Federal Emergency Housing Corporation had been completed, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States yesterday adopted a resolution calling for a limitation of low-cost housing projects constructed by the Federal Government.

Secretary Ickes said the Federal Housing Corporation is ready to proceed in assisting communities in slum clearance and housing construction.

The Chamber of Commerce also voiced opposition to the use of public works funds "to finance business units designed to compete with or duplicate existing units now rendering adequate service at reasonable cost."

The resolution, adopted by the directors, declared such action "is contrary to sound public policy, destructive of savings investments therein, made in good faith by all parts of our people, including wage earners and farmers, and causes an inequitable shift in the basis of taxation through removal of extensive property values and the income thereof from local, State and Federal taxation.

Federal Policy Sought.

"We ask the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works to announce a policy against such use of Federal funds. Such an announcement will contribute greatly to restoration of confidence in a large aggregate of existing investments and encourage existing business enterprise to proceed with needed plans for extensions and betterment of service, thus furthering employment."

The resolution went on to say that "loans to limited dividend corporations, organized by public spirited citizens with community backing, are to be preferred to direct construction as an experimental means to provide employment through Government encouragement of low cost housing."

Confidence of investors would be restored, it continued, if the Federal Government confines housing construction "to demonstration projects for income groups for which new housing has not hitherto been constructed." Temporary plans to provide employment through Government financing of individual home construction, the directors stated, should be carried "through the cooperation of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board."

Corporation Officers.

Secretary Ickes is president of the Federal Housing Corporation, Secretary of Labor Perkins is vice president.

Rexford G. Tugwell, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, is treasurer; Lloyd H. Landau, solicitor of the Public Works Administration, secretary, and George H. Parker, chief accountant of the P. W. A. comptroller.

The following directors were elected by the incorporators: Robert D. Kohn, director of housing; Col. H. M. Waite, deputy administrator of public works; Secretary Ickes, Secretary Perkins and Mr. Tugwell.

In explaining functions of the corporation—to assist public and civic organizations financially in housing projects—the secretary emphasized the new agency will not interfere with programs being handled separately by P. W. A.

Half-Billion Available.

The corporation will draw from approximately $500,000,000 which remains in public works funds.

Urging swift action on Washington's proposed slum elimination and housing projects, Horace Peaslee, consultant in the division of housing, Friday told the advisory committee, headed by Commissioner Hazen, that public works funds for such purposes probably would be depleted by January 1. Completion of the corporation's organization followed by a few days the return of Mr. Kohn from a two-week tour of municipal housing activities in the Middle West and on the Pacific Coast.

Crawford Defense to Demand Negroes on Death Trial Jury

Will Seek Venue Change Also in Ilsley Murder Case at Leesburg.

Negro representation will be demanded on the jury which tries George Crawford, Negro, charged with murder, starting December 12 at Leesburg, Va., Charles H. Houston, chief of defense counsel, announced here last night.

"To exclude qualified Negroes from petit juries solely on the grounds of race and color," Houston declared, "constitutes just as much discrimination as their exclusion from grand juries. No Negroes ever have been permitted on trial juries in Loudoun County."

The lawyer announced he would challenge the entire array of veniremen from which the trial jury must be drawn. He will ask delay of the trial until a new group of jurors, including Negroes, can be obtained. Houston explained if his demand should be denied he would take the issue to the Supreme Court in case of conviction.

Defense attorneys raised the same issue a fortnight ago at a hearing in Leesburg before Judge James L. McLemore, when they unsuccessfully sought to quash indictments charging Crawford with the murder of Mrs. Agnes Boeing Ilsley and her maid, Mrs. Nina Buckner. The judge ruled Negroes had not been excluded from the grand jury returning the indictments.

Houston said he favored an early trial and would not seek a change of venue to remove the case from Loudoun County. The defense is expected to build its case around the contention that Crawford was in Massachusetts when the murders occurred.

Meanwhile, Frank Wray, of Berryville, Va., representing the prosecution, predicted selection of the jury would require one day and presentation of evidence by both sides three or four additional days. He announced the State would call about 18 witnesses.

A mass meeting to raise funds for the defense will be held tonight in the Ninteenth Street Baptist Church. Walter White, secretary of the National Association for Advancement of Colored People, emphasized Crawford's attorneys were serving without fee.

Lynching Case Letters Laid Before Courts

Effort Made to Enlist Judges in Refusal to Arrest Nine.

Baltimore, Nov. 18 (AP).—Attorney General William Preston Lane, jr., today endeavored to enlist the three judges of the First Judicial District in his efforts to secure the immediate arrest of nine men, whom eyewitnesses swore took part in the lynching of George Armwood, Negro, at Princess Anne, last month.

Mr. Lane sent the judges the correspondence between him and John B. Robins, State's attorney of Somerset County, who has declined to have the arrests made and the men brought before a magistrate for public hearing. He gave his own position and Mr. Robins' statement that to arrest the nine men at this time would be to invite another mob to form and take them from jail.

Mr. Lane wrote the judges that he was sending the information "not only because I think you should be advised on the subject, but also because I understand that judges of the circuit will discuss the matter of procedure in the next day or two, and will, no doubt, also consult with State's Attorney Robins on the subject."

Before sending the judges a copy of the correspondence between himself and Mr. Robins, however, Mr. Lane deleted that part giving the names of the nine men whom witnesses interviewed by him—State policemen and Baltimore detectives—charge with participation in the mob action.

Mr. Robins, at Crisfield, said he had not received Mr. Lane's second letter and, though it had been published in newspapers, he would not comment on it until he had received the original.

In the meantime Gov. Ritchie has taken no part in the controversy.

Son of Governor And His Bride Sail

Mr., Mrs. George White, Jr. on Bermuda Trip.

New York, Nov. 18 (AP)—Mr. and Mrs. George White, jr., sailed today on the liner Queen of Bermuda for Bermuda on a honeymoon trip. White is the son of Gov. White of Ohio.

The wedding ceremony, performed last night at Summit, N. J., was to have been an important social event, but due to the death of Robert White, younger son of the governor, in an automobile accident a week ago, it was made as simple as possible.

Gov. White did not see the couple off, having driven to Princeton for the football game. He plans to leave from Trenton, N. J., tonight for Columbus with his daughter, Mary.

RUPTURE IS NOT A TEAR

NO BREAK TO HEAL

Rupture is not a tear, but is due to a muscular weakness in the abdominal wall. Trusses merely brace these muscles but do not strengthen them—on the contrary, the gouging of the ordinary truss pad often increases this weakness as it tends to shut off circulation of the blood.

STUART'S ADHESIF PLAPAO-PADS are patentably different—being mechanico-chemico applicators—made self-ahesive purposely to keep the muscle-tonic called "Plapao" continuously applied to the affected parts, and to minimize danger of slipping and painful friction. The adhesive fabric is soft as velvet and clings to the body without straps, buckles or springs. Easy to apply—comfortable—inexpensive. Awarded Gold Medal, Rome, Grand Prix, Paris, Honorable Mention, Panama Pacific Exposition, San Francisco, etc. For almost a quarter century stacks of sworn testimonials from many different countries report success—without delay from work. The epidermatic absorption of Plapao utilizing "mechanico-chemico therapy" tends toward a natural process of recovery, after which no further use for a truss.

Stop wasting your time and money on old-fashioned devices. Learn how to close the hernial opening as nature intended, so the rupture can't come down. Send no money; just mail the Free Test coupon below. For your own good—write today—tomorrow may be too late.

Powers Grope In Vain to Save Arms Parley

Great Britain and Italy Split on How to Handle Germans.

Geneva, Nov. 18 (AP).—After seeking in a long conference with British representatives for a way to resuscitate the Disarmament Conference, Foreign Minister Joseph Paul-Boncour of France admitted tonight that the two governments no longer are agreed on how to handle the problem of German arms demands.

As the disarmament deadlock seemed the most complete at any time since Germany left the Geneva council a month ago, the United States arms delegates were invited to explain in a meeting tomorrow their attitude toward the outline Sir John Simon, the British foreign secretary, gave on prospects a month ago when Germany quit.

France Stands Pat.

M. Paul-Boncour reported that France will stick by the accords already reached and particularly favors the declaration of Sir John on October 14 regarding a draft convention.

This statement provided for a trial period of five years, or eight years, during which there would be a substantial measure of disarmament among heavily armed powers and the achievement of the principle of equality.

It was reported that the British wished to abandon or reduce the "period of trial" for Germany.

It was understood that the American position is that nobody chose Sir John to speak for the other powers at the October 14 meeting of the conference, although Americans agreed to the principles of his declaration.

Confer Today.

In an official communique, it was announced that Arthur Henderson, chairman of the conference, will confer tomorrow with representatives of the United States, Great Britain, France and Italy, which were among the powers for which Sir John spoke.

M. Paul-Boncour at a press conference announced that the French position has not changed.

"The departure of the Germans from the Disarmament Conference changes nothing in France's position," he asserted.

"We want to proceed making a disarmament convention but on the basis of accords previously reached, however, we are ready to talk."

This was taken to mean that Paul-Boncour was apprehensive that Sir John's return to Geneva would involve Great Britain's withdrawal from the Paris and Geneva accords.

Under these agreements France and Great Britain took a stand against the rearmament of Germany. Afterwards Chancellor Hitler, of Germany, proclaimed his demands for equality and the right to self-defense and then quit the Geneva parleys.

Calls League Sterile.

Simultaneously he declared the League of Nations was "sterile" and indicated a belief that nothing could come from disarmament talks under the aegis of the league. Italy, too, has revealed a desire to conduct a four-power conference elsewhere than in Geneva.

Supporters of the league saw danger in the combined German-Italian criticisms.

Italy did not send the head of her arms delegation, Baron Pompeo Atoisi, nor the undersecretary, Fulvio Suvich, but was represented today by the Marquis Di Soragna, second ranking member of the delegation.

France was understood to be willing to send delegates to Rome if necessary, but a feeling prevailed that the little entente nations, Yugoslavia, Roumania and Czechoslovakia, might oppose such a move.

Rome, Nov. 18 (AP).—A visit of Undersecretary Fulvio Suvich to the Chamber of Deputies building today to inspect its conference halls led to a widely entertained belief that Italy is actually preparing for a four-power disarmament meeting here.

Such a conference by representatives of Great Britain, France, Germany and Italy is considered by Premier Mussolini to be necessary to salvage the arms negotiations.

Phantom, Air-Minded Horse, Flies Here From New York

Girl Owner Claims Planes Best Transport for Mounts.

Miss Betty Rand hopes to foster the air transportation of fine horses.

Miss Rand and her horse arrived at Washington Airport Friday night from New York.

"I have hopes that all people will use planes to transport their fine horses," she said yesterday at the Mayflower Hotel.

"It is the only sensible and comfortable way of transporting a horse," she said.

Phantom, her steed, is now at the Ride and Hunt Club, none the worse for his plane ride from Newark Airport.

Miss Rand declared Phantom enjoys the air. She first took him up in 1928 when he was flown across the English Channel. Since he has flown many times in Europe.

The flying steed was scheduled to arrive Wednesday afternoon at Washington Airport, but Miss Rand said that when Phantom was being led into the plane he bumped his head. All further attempts to induce him to enter were in vain. But Friday he walked in without hesitation.

"The fact that wages and jobs stayed up, especially in October, when production slackened, indicates that employers as a whole are living up to the NRA."

House Groups Plans 4 Steps In Tax Revision

Subcommittee Completes Work on Tentative Proposals.

Four definite recommendations for plugging leaks in the Federal tax structure will be incorporated in a report of the special House subcommittee studying general tax revision, it became apparent last night.

With the exception of liquor control levies, to be worked out by the full House Ways and Means Committee following the report of the President's interdepartmental group, the House subcommittee has concluded its studies.

Recommendations tentatively drawn will be whipped into shape by Treasury actuarial and tax experts in time for final consideration on the eve of the first House Ways and Means Committee meeting December 4, Representative Samuel B. Hill (Democrat, Washington), subcommittee chairman, said last night.

Proposals Indicated.

Chairman Hill indicated subcommittee recommendations on income tax revision will propose:

1. Changes in the existing law designed to eliminate tax-free corporate capital adjustments.
2. Limitation of capital losses to capital gains, without any carryover of net loss as against ordinary income.
3. Wholesale abolition of consolidated income tax returns (tentative).
4. General limitation of deduction items on income and estate taxes.

Chairman Hill said by far the largest item in savings he hopes will mount to $400,000,000 would be drawn from changes affecting corporate capital adjustments.

Reorganization of corporations through mergers, transfers of stock or assets of one corporation to another, recapitalization of corporations, and changes in the form, name and place of incorporations, provide big business with untold opportunities for tax avoidance, he pointed out.

Nuisance Tax View.

While Hill and other members of the subcommittee favor repealing some of the nuisance taxes, over and above the $220,000,000 that will be automatically revoked after prohibition, the report to the full committee will not recommend their revocation.

There is widespread sentiment in both House and Senate for lifting the stamp tax on checks and the 1 cent Federal gasoline tax.

Satisfied with the preliminary study, Chairman Robert L. Doughton, of the House Ways and Means Committee, yesterday returned to North Carolina.

Chairman Pat Harrison, of the Senate Finance Committee, hopes to hold joint tax sessions with the House Committee early in December.

Grange to Ask Farm Embargo

Will Demand Inflation and Restoration of "Trust" Ban.

Boise, Idaho, Nov. 18 (AP).—Requests for an embargo on importation of sugar and other agricultural commodities competing with American products and for inflation and restoration of the antitrust laws, as suggested by Senator William E. Borah, were drafted today into resolutions for consideration by the National Grange convention.

Confidence expressed by Senator Borah that inflation would lift prices, and that proper administration of restored antitrust laws would "keep an equal pace" between prices of farm and manufactured commodities, took root in the Grange convention within a few hours after his speech last night.

"Senator Borah's suggestions will be adopted almost without a change," said Louis J. Taber, National master.

Milk Inquiry Charge a Lie, King Declares

Producers' Agent Asserts Senator Threatened to "Get" Association.

A charge that Senator William H. King had threatened to "get" the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers Association was made yesterday before the Senate Milk Investigating Committee by Charles W. Holman, a National Producers official, and was labeled a "lie" by the chairman of the committee.

Senator King was not present when the charge was made. Apprised of it later, he said: "Of course, that's a lie, and if that's the kind of testimony they have to offer, they must have a pretty weak case."

Holman, who is secretary of the National Federation of Cooperative Milk Producers Associations, made the charge when Elwood Seal, special counsel to the committee, asked why he had included Salt Lake City in a table of comparative milk prices.

Blames Threat.

His purpose, he said, was because the senator had made the threat against the local association.

"When did Senator King say that?" asked Mr. Seal.

"He told me that at the door to the committee room when the Philippine independence bill was passed over a year ago."

"Who was present?" asked Senator Pat McCarran, Democrat, of Nevada.

"Only Senator King and I, but I wish the Senator was present so I could tell him now."

Earlier in the day, Mr. Seal had charged that John McGill, secretary of the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers Association, knew nothing of butterfat differential or retail milk prices which are prime factors in the determination of producers prices.

Stumped on Prices.

Joseph V. Morgan, attorney for the insurgent protective commitees of the producers association, asked McGill what prices the distributors got for cream made from second-class milk.

"I don't know what they get for the cream," McGill said.

"Do you assume to act for the producers without knowing what the distributors get for their product?"

"We make an investigation."

"Do you know what the Chestnut Farms gets for a quart of cream."

"No."

Seal then asked McGill whether prices to the producer had been lowered in Baltimore after the adoption of a three-price plan and McGill replied he did not know. McGill then admitted that I. W. Heaps was the sales agent for his association.

Heurich Cites Loss in Appeal Of Income Tax

Brewer Protests Charge of $32,557 for 1929, in Board Plea.

A ruling that he was $19,687 deficient in his 1929 income tax yesterday brought from Christian Heurich, well known Washington brewer, an appeal to the Board of Tax Appeals for a redetermination of the shortage.

Heurich was notified in September that his income tax return did not jibe with what the Bureau of Internal Revenue thought he owed the Government. Major discrepancies concerned income from property owned by Heurich at Fourteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue northwest, and in computing a loss he claimed on sale of 1,000 shares of stock in the brewing company bearing his name.

The case came to light yesterday when Heurich appealed the findings of the Revenue Bureau. The bureau held that his 1929 tax liability was $32,557, of which only $12,870 was assessed on the basis of original returns, leaving a deficiency of $19,687.

Internal revenue agents set the total income from all sources for the brewer at $223,787 for 1929, but with proper deductions the taxable income amounted to $100,486.

Heurich sold the 1,000 shares in 1929 for $40,000. He asserted that in 1913 the shares were worth $225,000 and claimed a deductible loss of $185,000 on the sale.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue set the 1913 value of the stock at only $100,000.

Amboy, Calif., Nov. 18 (AP).—Fearing he may be wandering on the Mojave desert, fighting hunger and thirst, authorities today began a search for Joseph M. Price, 66, of Philadelphia, who disappeared from a Transcontinental bus last Tuesday.

"The moon was new on the evening of November 17 and since then has been moving out from the sun toward Venus," Dr. Aitken said. "Both bodies are bright enough to see in full daylight and on the late afternoon of Monday, Nov. 20, you will be able to see the moon then a little west and south of Venus hurrying to overtake her.

Ancient Device Revealed in G. P. O. Building Was Never Used.

A discovery indicating that Hiawatha might have made a capable fireman was disclosed yesterday by Public Printer George H. Carter.

While browsing through the old building at North Capitol and H streets, which was the original Government Printing Office and is now used as a warehouse, he found two bow and arrow outfits, which half a century ago served as a lifesaving device.

Here was the system. If workers were trapped on upper stories by fire, an arrow was to be shot to the roof or through a window. Attached to the arrow was a cord, by which the employes could pull up a rope, then slide down it.

Well preserved in crumbling cabinets hanging on the wall, the bow sets bore instruction cards signed by Brig. Gen. Montgomery C. Meigs, U. S. A. Gen. Meigs, who was head of public works in Washington after the Civil War, was retired in 1882 and died ten years later.

The bow and arrow scheme, however noble in theory, never had a chance to prove its mettle. At least several Government Printing Office veterans, who have been employed in the office since Gen. Meigs' day, don't remember them being used in fires. One man, however, recalled some experiments with a chute through which girls would slide from the fourth floor to the sidewalk.

Not more than 1,000 names were on the pay roll when the Government Printing Office was housed in the old building, which is now 77 years old. Today the mammoth plant adjoining has 4,300 employes. And the bows and arrows, never used, are curios upon the walls of the Public Printer's office.

Actress' Adoption Fought by Father

He Sues to Void Decree of Sylvia Sidney.

New York, Nov. 18 (AP).—Victor Kosow, the father of Sylvia Sidney, screen actress, has brought suit in supreme court, it was learned today, to void the adoption of Miss Sidney by her stepfather, Dr. Sigmund Sidney, of New York, and Mrs. Sidney, the former Mrs. Kosow, and mother of the actress.

The action, naming the actress and Dr. and Mrs. Sidney as defendants, asks that the adoption granted in 1922 be voided on the ground he was not notified of the proceedings, as required by law, and that he did not give his consent.

In a reply filed by the defendants, Kosow is charged with having demanded $16,000 from Miss Sidney in 1932 on the threat of bringing such a suit as now is pending.

The holdup man forced Rooke and a colored attendant to lie on the floor, but they saw the men drive away.

Darden, Figure In Oil Scandal Inquiry, Dead

"Missing" Witness Passes Away in Maryland; Ill Long Time.

Cambridge, Md., Nov. 18 (AP).—James G. Darden, who became a nationally prominent figure as the "missing" witness in the Teapot Dome investigation, died here today after a lengthy illness.

He had lived in Cambridge for the last six years, moving here after his marriage in 1927 to Miss Margaret Larrimore, of Cambridge.

Born in North Carolina, "Col." Darden went West when he was "just a kid," he told an interviewer on one occasion. He rode the ranch as a cowboy for eight years.

During the Teapot Dome inquiry, he sprang into the limelight. A subpena was issued for him to appear as a witness, but for almost a month he could not be found. When he finally was reached at his farm near Catonsville, Md., he expressed surprise that a search had been conducted for him.

His appearance on the witness stand brought out that Albert B. Fall, then Secretary of the Interior, had sent Marines to eject the oil company employes at Teapot Dome, who were drilling an oil well for Darden.

On the witness stand he said he had raised money in North Carolina and other sections for the Harding preconvention and Presidential campaign.

He was generally supposed to have been a close friend of President Harding and Attorney General Harry M. Daughtery.

No details of funeral plans could be learned tonight.

Straus Fountain Plans Completed

Arts and Parks Bodies Discuss Great Plaza.

Plans for the Great Plaza, 590 by 790 feet, which will set off four of the new Triangle Federal buildings in sculpture and landscaping, were discussed yesterday by a joint committee representing the Fine Arts and National Park and Planning Commissions.

All is in readiness for erection of the Oscar Straus Memorial Fountain, which will dominate the plaza. It will be opposite the Commerce Building's main entrance on Fourteenth street and in the angle between the new Postoffice and Labor-I. C. C. Buildings.

Thomas H. MacDonald, chief of the Bureau of Public Roads, reported progress on plans relating to the Lee boulevard approach which embraces the Valley route to the north of Fort Myer and Arlington Cemetery. A program for the improvement of the Virginia area between Key and Arlington bridges was submitted by T. C. Jeffers, landscape architect of the Planning Commission.

Last Envoy of Czar Unmoved By Recognition of Communists

Col. Greger Still to Live Next to Embassy Here; Served Many Years.

Living at the Racquet Club, next door to the old Russian Embassy that is soon to become the Soviet Embassy, is the last of the czar's official diplomatic representatives in America, Col. Alexander Greger, 75 years old.

Col. Greger was acting Minister in Charge of the Russian Legation (it was not an embassy then) during the administrations of Presidents Arthur, Cleveland and Harrison. During the peace negotiations at Portsmouth following the Russian-Japanese War he was one of the czar's representatives. Later he was Russian Minister to a number of South American countries.

Leaving a chess game, which he declared was much more important to him than Russian recognition, Col. Greger explained that he would continue to live next door to the embassy, even though it is to be occupied by Communists.

"Why not?" he asked, "I don't think they will make enough noise to interrupt my sleep."

But Col. Greger has no sympathy for the Communists. Asked what he thought of Russian recognition, he said, "I don't think about it." He refuses to pronounce the name of Maxim Litvinoff, who concluded recognition arrangements with President Roosevelt. He calls him "Mr. Finkelstein."

Standing erect, his white moustache bristling, Col. Greger is convincing when he says he was one of the Czar's guards in his youth and when he declares that his proudest possession is a Cross of St. George bestowed on him by the Czar for extreme bravery.

When asked whether he would like to return to Russia, Col. Gregor said:

"I don't say that I shall never return, but I can't go just now. I have been sentenced to death. I have seen my death warrant. My property has been confiscated. I was once a very wealthy man. I had property that gave me an income of $500,000 a year. Today I have nothing. They have taken it all. Not a single member of my family is alive. I don't think a member of my old regiment is alive."

After the war he returned to America and for a time was a lecturer at Johns Hopkins and Georgetown Universities. Now he is employed at the office of the Tariff Commission.

COL. ALEXANDER GREGER.

Capital Group To Help Board Enforce Codes

Investigators Here Will Aid Compliance Body Pending Change.

Appointment of a group of investigators to supplement the work of the local NRA compliance board in enforcing temporary codes was announced yesterday by Maj. Raymond J. Walter, executive officer of the board.

Snooping tactics will not be used by the investigators, Maj. Walter emphasized, but they will cooperate in seeing that employers are living up to their agreements as to hours and wages, he said.

Work of the local NRA board is confined at present to temporary codes, or President's reemployment agreements. Industries and trades under regular codes are under supervision of a district compliance officer stationed in Norfolk, Va.

New Officer Looms.

This situation is expected to be changed early this week by NRA headquarters with the appointment of a District compliance officer in Washington. Maj. Walter is understood to be in line for the job. As executive officer for the local compliance board Maj. Walter has worked without remuneration since last August. He has been in complete charge of investigation of complaints and readjustment of cases of employers charged with noncompliance.

Administration of the retail code in Washington will be in charge of a Retail Trade Council, the organization of which is to be completed early this week by the Merchants and Manufacturers Association and the Better Business Bureau.

Some Members Named.

The following representatives of the council have been appointed: Edwin Hahn, and Edward J. Rich (alternate) representing the shoe trade; Harry T. Roche, of Mayer & Co., the furniture retailers, and Homer L. Kitt, music dealers.

Representatives of men's clothiers, women's wear and hardware will be selected at meetings tomorrow. Any merchant, regardless of whether he is a member of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association, is invited to attend the meeting. Department store and limited price variety store groups will meet Tuesday.

After all representatives have been named for the council, its officers will be elected.

Sales Boosted By Retail Code

Dry Goods Men Report to Johnson With Cheerful News.

Improved retail sales since the adoption of the retail code were reported yesterday to Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, NRA administrator, by officials of the National Retail Dry Goods Association.

Bringing with them expressions of optimism, Lew Hahn, president of the association, and Neil Petree, president of James McCreery & Co., told the administrator that sales in retail stores all over the country had shown marked increase.

Although most stores opened November with some bad days, they all experienced a spurt beginning on election day. Most retail concerns feel this upswing is the greatest they have had in several weeks.

"Many retailers openly express the belief that the fog of uncertainty over the functioning of the NRA is being dissipated rapidly and the hoped-for effects are gradually being realized," said Hahn.

Storekeepers are said to feel that Christmas shopping this year will far exceed that of last year.

"More stores reported sales ahead of last year for the month of October than in August or September," said Petree.

Belmont Hunt Rider Suffers Skull Injury

Accident Mars First Run of Season at Hurleys' Virginia Estate.

Leesburg, Va., Nov. 18 (Spl.)—An accident in the hunting field this morning at historic Belmont estate of Former Secretary of War and Mrs. Patrick J. Hurley, marred the first hunt of the season.

Shortly after the hunt had started and before a fox was jumped, a thoroughbred horse, Pat, 18 years old, well-known in the hunting field, dropped dead after taking two jumps close together, and fell upon and crushed his rider, Lee Gill, 18, son of Luther Gill, of Leesburg.

Gill was taken unconscious to the Loudoun County Hospital. Doctors announced his skull was fractured and said his condition was serious.

Mrs. Hurley, riding in the field close behind Gill, unnerved and saddened by the accident, returned to the house. Others continued the hunt.

The hounds, horses and riders gathered at Belmont today at 9 a. m.

A field of fifty riders followed the hounds. Spectators watched the start of the hunt from the lawns. Many followed on foot as far as they could see the riders.

A fox was jumped on the Warner Snider estate about three miles from the start of the meet. Sir Reynard gave them a hard chase for nearly an hour, then, ever wary, eluded his pursuers by finding his den.

The huntsmen were met on their return at Belmont Mansion by Mr. and Mrs. Hurley, who entertained at a hunt breakfast for the Loudoun Hunt, their friends, and other personal guests. More than 200 guests were present for the breakafst.

Guns Salute Governor.

A Governor's salute of 19 guns by Battery F. 111th Field Artillery, Virginia National Guard, was followed by cutting by Gov. Pollard of the ribbon officially opening the road, held by Miss Marjorie Eleanor Hopkins and Miss Nancy Elizabeth Carter.

Fifty carrier pigeons were released by Miss Laura Alice Heflin, bearing tidings of the opening of the new highway to travel bureaus in major centers in the Eastern United States. The birds were secured through efforts of Earl E. Pennington, bird fancier of Washington.

The Rev. Mr. Lancaster suggested to the assemblage that the recently completed Highway No. 2 from Fredericksburg to Richmond through Bowling Green be named the "Pollard Highway."

"The road is safe, straight, handsome, and on the level, and therefore in perfect keeping and fitness with the character of him who has been executive of Virginia for the past four years. Therefore, I recommend that this road be named in honor of Gov. John Garland Pollard."

Cuba Augments Palace Guard; Bombs Hurled

Martial Law Tightened; Students Rap Welles; Grau Sanguine.

Havana, Nov. 18 (AP).—As rumors of a new revolutionary movement continued rampant and bomb throwers renewed their activities, Minister of War Antonio Guiteras today revealed that martial law will be enforced strictly and all plans will be abandoned for liberating political prisoners.

Barricades around the presidential palace were strengthened, but President Grau San Martin asserted that "normality and order have been reestablished all over Cuba."

Reports from Cienfuegos said bands of rebels were operating in nearby hills, while a government gunboat patrolled the coast watching their movements. Their leader surrendered, but his men continued to be active.

Soldiers arrested four prominent Cienfuegos youths who were traveling in an automobile that carried a large dynamite bomb. Authorities said they were members of the A. B. C. Secret Society and would be sent as prisoners to Havana.

Death Asked for Three.

Rebel groups were in the field throughout Oriente Province and in Santiago Province.

The court of sanctions in Santiago asked the death sentence for three soldiers accused of killings during the administration of former President Gerardo Machado.

During the night and today bombs exploded and there were rumors of new outbreaks against the government.

Speculation continued, meanwhile, regarding the conference of American Ambassador Sumner Welles and President Roosevelt.

The University of Havana undergraduate newspaper, Alma Mater, continued to attack Mr. Welles. Its cover contained a picture of President Roosevelt, with the United States flag in the background, which carried the caption:

"Roosevelt: Our people, which are your friend and also the friend of the American people, thank you for taking Welles away and hope it will be forever."

Welles Actions Denied.

Segundo Curti, a student leader, maintained that "Cuban youths must present a united front against the old politicians and foreign interference; that is why we are trying to reach an understanding with the ABC and other youhtful organizations."

The O. C. R. R. opposition group issued this statement:

"Inasmuch as Welles has been accused of instigating and inciting or counseling certain activities and attitudes against the Grau government, the O. C. R. R.—which has been in frequent contact with Welles since his arrival in Cuba—feels obligated to declare that in no case has the ambassador offered such consel or such suggestions to this organization.

"He has limited his counsel to advising us to use cordiality and cooperation among different sectors to bring about a solution of Cuba's problems through and among Cubans."

Funeral Halted by Autopsy; Reveals Auto Killed Woman

A funeral service was interrupted yesterday while an autopsy was performed on the body of Mrs. Eugenia Donohoe, of 1014 East Capitol street, disclosing that the woman's death had been caused by fractured ribs received in an automobile accident.

Lloyd H. Van Kirk, of 1900 Irving street northeast, whose automobile struck Mrs. Donohoe on November 3, was held for action of the grand jury by the coroner's jury.

A certificate of death from pneumonia had been issued by a physician before Dr. D. J. Murphy, deputy coroner, decided to operate. He reported that death had been caused "by fractured ribs complicated by pneumonia."

Mrs. Donohoe was struck, the jury was told, after she had stepped in front of Van Kirk's car from behind a parked automobile. Van Kirk said he was traveling slowly at the time.

After the inquest funeral services were held, followed by burial in Mount Olivet Cemetery.

Careful

Col. Lindbergh Tells Why He Keeps Plans Secret.

Lisbon, Nov. 18 (AP).—Col. Charles A. Lindbergh today at the American Legation explained why he doesn't say in advance when he will leave.

The colonel said he believed many aviators had lost their lives because they could not refuse at the last minute to start on a flight when conditions were against it, just because the start has been announced.

It had previously been reported that Col. Lindbergh would leave here for the Azores Monday if weather conditions permitted, but the flyer has not confirmed this.

Today he and Mrs. Lindbergh motored into the interior of Portugal.

Albert Best, 35, called by police "one of the cleverest confidence men in the East," and his pretty blonde wife, Thea, 21, were returned here yesterday in the custody of a United States marshal from Cleveland for trial.

The pair were arrested in Akron more than a week ago on information furnished in a bulletin issued by Washington police. They will stand trial on charges growing out of two allegedly forged checks on a New York bank given by Best for $1,600 worth of travelers' checks.

Operating under the name of William Fortune, Best is said to have swindled several prominent Washingtonians.

Best is wanted in several European capitals, police asserted. In December, 1930, he escaped from a chain gang at Raiford, Fla., they said.

Quiz on R. F. C. Bank Loans Set

Senators to Sift Officials' Possible Interest in Advances.

The Senate Banking Committee will call on the Reconstruction Finance Corporation this week for separate reports on Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans to banks in which directors or officials have any interest, Chairman Fletcher announced last night.

The committee originally called on the corporation for a list of all loans to mortgage companies, as well as banks in which directors had interest.

Fletcher said last night he thought this was "too large an order" at one time.

Rather than wait for the list of all loans to mortgage companies, Fletcher said he thought the subcommittee would take up at once a Reconstruction Finance Corporation loan to the Midland Mortgage Co. of Texas, in which a brother of Jesse H. Jones, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, was said to be interested.

Also scheduled for early inquiry is the $90,000,000 Reconstruction Finance Corporation loan to the Central Republic Trust Co., of Chicago, headed by Charles G. Dawes, former Reconstruction Finance Corporation chairman.

Distillery Code Hearings Fixed

Domestic Grain Purchase at Special Price Proposed.

Hearings on the proposed distillers' code will begin at 9:30 a. m. Friday, in the Mayflower Hotel, the Farm Administration announced last night.

The code also would bar practices considered unethical, including false advertising, commercial bribery, false invoicing, shipment on consignment, and secret rebates. It would pledge distillers to uphold the laws of States and subdivisions regulating the liquor industry.

The code would be administered by a distillers' board of 13 persons, their appointment being subject to approval of the Secretary of Agriculture. Distillers would be required to keep their books open for inspection by the Department and would be licensed by the Agricultural Department.

Labor provisions of the code would be under jurisdiction of the NRA.

Death Penalty Asked in U. S. Kidnaping Law

Prosecutor of Urschel Captors Seeks Action by Congress.

Amendment to the Federal kidnaping law to provide the death penalty instead of life imprisonment is being sought by Herbert K. Hyde, United States district attorney in Oklahoma and the man who prosecuted George "Machine Gun" Kelly, Harvey Bailey and 10 others in the Urschel kidnaping case in Oklahoma City.

Hyde, who is visiting Washington, has that as one of his missions here. He said yesterday he expects Senator Gore, of Oklahoma, to introduce such an amendment.

Another purpose in Hyde's visit is to tell Federal officials that he does not believe William "Alfalfa Bill" Murray, Governor of Oklahoma, is properly administering Federal relief funds in his State.

"I have positive evidence," Hyde said, "that Oklahoma relief workers are being forced to subscribe to a paper published by Gov. Murray under penalty of losing their jobs."

Retirement in January.

When Hyde made a similar statement in Oklahoma recently Gov. Murray denied it.

"I have visited the Department of Justice and discussed the Oklahoma relief matter," Hyde said, "but I am told that the governor of a State has absolute jurisdiction over distribution of these funds and there is nothing that can be done about it."

Hyde said he expects to take up the alleged improper distribution of money with Harry Hopkins, head of the relief administration.

A third purpose in Hyde's visit is to close his relationship with the Department of Justice, because he expects to take up the private practice of law in Oklahoma City January 1. He has served as assistant district attorney and district attorney for six years. He was the youngest man in the United States to hold that job. He is now 35 years old. He formerly was secretary to Senator Pine of Oklahoma.

Urschel Ransom Sought.

"About the only thing to do in connection with the Urschel kidnaping case," Hyde said, "is to try to find $125,000 in ransom money paid for Urschel's return. We have recovered $75,000 of the $200,000 ransom, but we don't know where the rest is. The Department of Justice still is looking for it.

"Credit for the apprehension and conviction of the kidnapers belongs to Urschel himself," Hyde said.

Urschel observed that a plane which daily flew over the house in which he was held captive failed to make the trip one day. Through this clew the hiding place was located and the kidnapers arrested.

Hyde does not take very seriously the threats made against his life and the lives of members of his family by gangsters. He feels that "people who write threatening letters rarely go any farther."

Air Crash Bomb Theory Upset After Federal Investigation

Death of 7 Over Indiana Oct. 10 Still Shrouded in Mystery.

An intensive inquiry by the Department of Justice into the crash of the United Air Lines transport plane near Chesterton, Ind., the night of October 10 has failed to disclose evidence that a bomb sent the great air liner hurtling from the skies, it was learned yesterday.

Export investigators of the Bureau of Investigation were placed on the case at the request of the aeronautics branch of the Department of Commerce when evidence suggested that a bomb caused the wreck which killed seven persons.

The probe, it was learned yesterday, failed to disclose any criminal activity in connection with the wreck.

Dr. Clarence Muehlberger and Prof. Leonard Keeler, of Northwestern University scientific crime detection laboratory, who examined bits of the plane and scraps of material picked up around the wreckage, had reported signs of an explosion aboard the ship.

The scientists believed a gangster or other person had placed a package containing nitroglycerin in a pile of blankets.

Bureau agents investigated at Newark, Cleveland and Chicago, the three points which the plane visited on its run. It was felt by some that disagreements with airport workers at Chicago might have led to an attempt to wreck the craft, but this theory failed to stand up. Newark Airport attendants were cleared of suspicion likewise, and a man who left the plane at Cleveland was exonerated.

The crash now more of a mystery than ever, was one of the worst in the annals of the United Air Lines, and the first fatal mishap in seven years on its Newark-Chicago run. There was no apparent natural cause for the wreck, as witnesses reported the plane was sweeping swiftly along when suddenly it burst into flames and fell in two parts.

No further action by the Department of Justice in the way of prosecution is expected.

Succeeds Gen. Winship; Promotion in Order Minus Pay Hike.

Col. Arthur W. Brown, now serving on the League of Nation's Columbian-Peruvian Commission in the Leticia dispute settlement, was named judge advocate general of the Army by President Roosevelt yesterday. He succeeds Maj. Gen. Blanton Winship, who retires November 30.

With the new post, Col. Brown will be elevated to the rank of Major General but it is doubtful he will have any increase of salary, due to the ruling of Comptroller General McCarl that the economy act permits no increases.

Maj. Gen. Brown was born at Davenport, Iowa, in 1873. He is a graduate of Cornell University. Since 1912 he has been in the judge advocate general's department. For 14 years previous he was in the artillery and infantry.

New "Pill-Box" Fort to Guard Paris Chamber

Will Be Stronghold for Police Against Mobs Menacing Deputies.

Paris, Nov. 18 (AP).—A stony-faced "sentinel" henceforward will guard the Chamber of Deputies against unruly demonstrations by the citizenry.

This "sentinel"—a miniature pillbox fort of reinforced concrete—has been erected opposite the chamber, where it commands approaches to the Parliament Building, including the Concorde Bridge over the Seine.

Equipped with telephones, with a direct line to police headquarters, it will serve henceforth as an observation post and stronghold for police called to hold off unruly manifestants.

Twice within less than a year—during the war debt discussion that overthrew Edouard Herriot as premier last December, and the unpopular budget-balancing efforts more recently—the chamber debates have attracted demonstrations.

In each case thousands of police and mounted republican guards blocked off all approaches to the chamber, even barricading the streets and sidewalks with trucks and guardsmen's horses drawn up in military ranks.

The new little fortress on the bank of the Seine is a hexagonal building, with tiny windows in each of its walls and a raised roof which would permit beleaguered policemen to peer over the walls.

U. D. C. Petition "Lee" Stamp

Convention Asks Postal Honor for Southern Commander.

Baltimore, Nov. 18 (AP). — The United Daughters of the Confederacy today voted to petition the United States Government to place upon one of its postage stamps the portrait of Gen. Robert E. Lee.

As precedent for the proposed honor to the leader of an army which battled the United States for four years, the daughters will point out the Stone Mountain Memorial 50-cent pieces, which bore images of Lee and other "rebel" leaders.

The Stone Mountain coin drew fire from Grand Army of the Republic camps in many sections.

The daughters decided to seek the Lee stamp during the closing day of their annual convention here. During the afternoon session they heard a greeting from President Roosevelt, read by Mrs. William E. Byrne, of Charles Town, W. Va., retiring president general.

The convention closed with the installation of Mrs. William E. Massey, of Hot Springs, president general, and other new officers tonight.

Gettysburg Rites To Honor Lincoln

Col. Grant Speaks Today at Address Observance.

Gettysburg, Pa., Nov. 18 (U.P.).—The solemn words of Abraham Lincoln's Gettysburg address will ring out again tomorrow across the field on which the decisive battle of the Civil War was fought.

They will be spoken by Robert Lincoln Casswell, famed impersonator of the Emancipator, before an audience gathered to commemorate the seventieth anniversary of the Civil War President's delivery of the address.

With them will be the grandsons of four famous figures in the conflict—President Lincoln, Gen. Grant, Gen. Meade and Gen. Lee. Col. Ulysses S. Grant 3d, grandson of Gen. Grant, will deliver the principal address.

Pinchot Is Defied By Prison Head

Woolman, Blamed in Riots, Refuses to Quit.

Philadelphia, Nov. 18 (U.P.).—Henry N. Woolman, president of the board of trustees of the Eastern State Penitentiary, tonight refused to resign.

Gov. Pinchot had requested Woolman to resign immediately, charging he had been "indirectly responsible" for the recent prison riots.

Woolman said that "I most emphatically am not going to resign" and place the responsibility for the riots upon the governor. He contended Pinchot alone had the power to allow the board to hire extra guards at Graterford, and that failure to have the guards there prevents the transfer of 500 prisoners to the new institution.

ANN ARBOR, Mich., Nov. 18 (AP) Michigan's dream of a football empire for 1933 was jolted today as the Wolverines were held to a scoreless tie by Minnesota in a desperately fought football duel, waged on a slippery gridiron before 65,000 roaring spectators.

Unbeaten since 1931 in 16 previous games, Michigan was outplayed by the rampaging Gophers and lucky to escape defeat in one of the biggest upsets of the college season.

The tie automatically knocked the Wolverines out of the race for National championship honors, as the list of unbeaten and untied teams was further curtailed, but they remained in the running for the Big Ten championship, nevertheless, with only one more game to play, against Northwestern.

Land Star of Game.

Today's battle sustained the tradition of hard fought rivalry between Michigan and Minnesota. What little there was to choose in a hard-charging struggle between two great lines favored the Gophers as, with one exception, the offensive efforts of both teams were kept between the opposing 30-yard lines.

In Francis (Pug) Lund, rugged half back, Minnesota exhibited the most elusive and hard-hitting ball-lugger of the afternoon on a cold, slippery field. The Gophers also came close to breaking the deadlock when Bill Bevan, big guard, missed an attempted filed goal from Michigan's 24-yard line in the last five minutes of the game.

Pass Is Intercepted.

The failure of this placement attempt was the climax of the game's only attacking thrill and Minnesota's biggest bid for a victory over Michigan that the Gophers have now been seeking in vain for five years. It followed the interception of a Michagan pass at midfield by Roy Oen, Gopher captain, and a series of sensational dashes by Pug Lund.

Reeling off successive advances of 12, 9 and 15 yards as he whirled and plunged, shedding tacklers like a duck sheds water, Lund appeared personally capable of lugging the ball across the Michigan goal until he was brought down on his last dash on Michigan's 15. At this juncture, however, a typical bit of smart Wolverine defensive work was executed by Bill Renner, quarter back, who dashed in to nail Alphonse for a 7-yard loss and abruptly check the Gopher drive.

The huge stands reverberated with the roar of the crowd as Michigan made its last stand, then became tense with silence as Bevan dropped back for the attempt at a field goal, on fourth down. He got the ball away successfully and with plenty of altitude, but it sliced to the left of the uprights and bounded harmlessly back of the end zone.

Lund, without doubt, was the outstanding star of the game and the hero of Minnesota's "moral victory" over a team that had not been stopped since losing to Ohio State two years ago and which was an outstanding favorite to finish the 1933 season with a spotless record.

Lund, in fact, outgained the entire Michigan offense by collecting 102 of the 153 yards Minnesota gained from scrimmage as compared with the total of only 72 yards advanced by the Wolverines. On first downs, Minnesota showed a 7 to 5 advantage.

Ram Foe's Run-Back For Score His 2d of '33

San Francisco, Nov. 18 (AP).—Norman Fanklin's run-back to touchdown of a kick-off against Fordham today in New York was the second time this season he accomplished this feat.

Playing here on October 14 against the University of San Francisco, the elusive Oregon State half back took the opening kick-off and ran 94 yards to score. Franklin is a Long Beach, Calif., boy.

Boston Gets Grove, Harris Is Quoted

Berkeley Springs, W. Va., Nov. 18 (Spl.).—Stanley (Bucky) Harris, recently named manager of the Boston Red Sox, was quoted by friends here today as saying that his team had purchased Lefty Grove, Rube Walberg and Max Bishop from the Athletics.

Harris yesterday concluded a two-day quail-hunting trip in this vicinity. Members of his party said that Harris named $125,000 as the purchase price for Grove, but did not mention figures for the other two players.

AN inspired Georgetown eleven that bore a faint resemblance to the powerful Blue and Gray machines of former years lost a savagely-fought game to Carnegie Tech yesterday at Griffith Stadium by a 19-0 score. Although a moral victory for the Hoyas, it will go down in the records as their fifth defeat of the year.

Georgetown threw every ounce of its power into the fray in a gallant effort to retrieve some part of its rapidly vanishing prestige, but to no avail. The line at times attained heights bordering on brilliance, but the backs refused to cooperate, and therein lies the story of the tragedy.

Carnegie's attack was slow in getting under way, principally because of the tenacity of Georgetown's line. But it gathered momentum as the game progressed, bursting into a shower of well-timed forward passes and biting stabs at the line that produced the necessary points to quell the home guard.

Punting Holds Carnegie.

Nick Viskovich's splendid punting kept Carnegie on the defensive in the early stages of the first period. Dick Murphy grounded the first kick on Tech's 3-yard line, and together with George Becker downed Carrol Spisak, receiver of the second, nine yards from the goal.

Following a third kick by Viskovich that drove it back to the 20-yard line, the big Red eleven wheeled its Big Berthas into action and started its first march to a touchdown. A 39-yard aerial from Brewer to Spisak,, with some consistent line plunging and a 5-yard off-side penalty against G. U. sandwiched in between, culminated in Bowser's hike-through tackle for the score.

Apparently more concerned over next week's game with N. Y. U. than with Georgetown, Coach Jess Harpster elected to save his regulars as much as possible. The boys seemed to be in a saving mood too, for when they did go into action, in the second period, their attack stalled and Georgetown took possession of the oval.

Passes Bring Scores.

Forward passes accounted for the last two touchdowns, one coming after Dreshar blocked and recovered Viskovich's punt on G. U.'s 29-yard line. Spencer hit off-tackle for a first down on the 23-yard mark, and Spisak completed the drive by passing to the same player for the score.

Manhattan's Drive Stops C. U., 7-0

Cards Beaten in Snow and Mud, Victims of Bad Breaks.

EBBETS FIELD, Brooklyn, Nov. 18 (Spl.).—On a snow-mantled field that slowly turned into a sea of mud, Manhattan's eleven closed its season with a 7-to-0 victory over the Catholic University Cardinals here today. Taking advantage of numerous Catholic misplays, the Jaspers thrilled 8,000 half-frozen fans with their brilliant play in all departments.

It was Manhattan's first major victory of the season, and its first over the Cardinals in four years. Capt. Bill Pendergast closed his college career in a blaze of glory, but it was Full Back Welch, of the home team, who scored the winning tally. This sophomore almost took the honors from his back-field mate with his consistent ground gaining and kicking. He averaged more than 40 yards on his punts, keeping the play well in the visitors' territory.

Disheatening Breaks.

The Cardinals truly were victims of the unplayable field, and they suffered several disheartening breaks early in the game. There was no question as to their superiority in ground attack, for the Cards reeled off 11 first downs to the New Yorkers' 4, and outgained them 154 to 112 yards.

The redeeeming act for the Cardinals was the superior defensive play of Phil Gross. The giant tackle continually broke through the Green line to throw the Jasper backs for losses. His vigorous driving cost his team a penalty for roughness at one of the crucial points late in the game. Gross made good the opportunity denied him in the Detroit contest.

Lajousky, soph guard, repaid Coach Bergman's faith in him by ably supporting the Red and Black line when inserted in the second half. Conter, tackle, and Ball, reserve end, and White, center, stood out in the Catholic U. line.

Stars in Back Field.

Capt. Jankowski, Oliver and Tom Gearty stood head and shoulders above the other Catholic backs experiencing an off-day. Jankowski found the Manhattan line for innumerable short gains on his spinners. Oliver's beautiful kicking was overshadowed by that of Welch,

Colgate Rallies To Nip Syracuse

McDonough's 75-Yard Run Is Feature of Game.

Syracuse, N. Y., Nov. 18 (AP). Syracuse's football array outplayed Colgate by a wide margin for three periods of the thirty-seventh game of their clasic rivalry today, but the Red Raiders uncorked a terrific burst of power in the final quarter to earn a 13-to-3 victory.

A dazzling 75-yard run by Marty McDonough, sub half back, for Colgate's second touchdown was the outstanding individual feature of the game.

Widmyer Stars as Terps Win Second Game of Year at Baltimore.

By a Staff Correspondent.

HOMEWOOD FIELD, Baltimore, Nov. 18.—Maryland continued what is well on the way to becoming a time-honored custom here this afternoon by defeating Johns Hopkins, 27 to 7, in an interesting, though not well-played game.

A scant crowd of 3,000 watched the Terps hand the embryonic medicos their sixth spanking in as many years. It was Maryland's second victory of the season, and the first since the opening game.

The contest was strictly a battle between the ground warfare of the Terrapins and the aerial attack of the Blue Jays, who seemed to have had their wings clipped. Only once, in the second period, did the Blue ays' air maneuvers function perfectly, and that once resulted in their lone touchdown.

Widmyer Terps' Star.

Earl Widmyer added a note of class to the proceedings with his eel-like broken field running, which was responsible for much of the yardage gained by the Old Liners in their steady and almost uninterrupted marches towards the goal posts.

The Jays muffed an opportunity to

DYCHE STADIUM, Evanston, Ill., Nov. 18 (AP).—Andy Pilney, the sophomore poet from Chicago's West Side, led Notre Dame out of football's wilderness today, with a 7-to-0 victory over Northwestern.

Out of a battle that raged so fiercely between the traditional rivals of the gridiron that three players were helped off the field, Pilney dashed over for the only touchdown in the second period after an "Old Guard" of the Notre Dame forward wall, Ed Krause, had blocked one of Ollie Olson's punts.

It was the first victory, the first score, for the leg weary Ramblers from Southbend in five games, but it was probably the sweetest of all. It was well deserved, too, as the Ramblers pushed the Wildcats all over the field and piled the impressive total of 256 yards from scrimmage by passes and a slashing attack to only 45 for the Wildcats. They made 13 first downs to only 1 for their opponents and the statistics didn't lie.

Bore Rabbits' Feet.

Twenty Rambler players stuffed rabbits' feet in their moleskins and one of them was carried by Pilney, a sophomore, who until today failed to live up to his reputation for lugging the pigskin over striped ground.

The long Notre Dame scoring famine ended quickly. Ollie Olson, himself helped off the field along with Al Kawal and Tony Mazziotti, of Notre Dame, during the heavy shelling, had just booted a Crusaders Are Outplayed for Three Quarters.

Worcester, Mass., Nov. 18 (AP). Surprisingly outplayed for three quarters by Little Springfield College, Holy Cross' big and burley Crusaders put on a successful last-period drive to turn back the Gymnasts, 19 to 6, in their last home appearance of the season.

Two touchdowns in the closing quarter gave the Purple hosts the victory after they had deadlocked the score in the third period.

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 18 (AP). The fighting Cornhuskers from the Nebraska plains stood off a relentless pounding attack from Pittsburgh's football powerhouse for three periods today, but weakened against a fresh Panther backfield in the final quarter, yielded a single touchdown and tumbled from the narrowing list of the undefeated and untied. The score was 6-0.

Seven times the thin red line, which had held at bay the best of the Big Six, stopped the Pittsburgh attack within the 20-yard line, twice on the two-yard marker, but it was not equal to the task of halting an air raid and it was through that medium Pittsburgh struck for its score.

Gallops 32 Yards.

The Pitt reseerves were not long about it when they were sent into the game opening the fourth quarter. George Sauer, Nebraska's big fullback punted out to his own 45-yard line from his 12. Leon Shedlosky made five yards on two tries at the line. Heinei Weisenbaugh, one of the fastest Panther backs, then broke through the left sids of

Oregon Bows To Trojans, 26 to 0

Warburton Victors' Ace as Foe Is Dealt First Defeat of Year.

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 18 (AP).—The football wizardry of a great little quarter back, Irvine (Cotton) Warburton, today enabled Southern California to blast the University of Oregon out of the undefeated class as the Trojans won, 26 to 0. About 60,000 spectators saw the home team get away fast, slow down for a time, and then come back with a rush.

The defeat spoiled the hopes of the Webfoots for an undefeated season, carrying with it the championship of the Pacific Coast Conference and opportunity to represent the West in the annual New Year's game in Pasadena Rose Bowl.

Warburton, who never before had caught a forward pass before his home folk, grabbed three out of the air today, the first two paving the way to touchdowns and the third leading directly to a score as Warburton galloped 54 yards to the goal line.

The welterweight, almost lost to view among the heavyweights and light heavyweights on the field, was the only consistent ground-gainer the Trojans could offer, but he was enough.

Southern California was ragged at intervals, but managed to stand off every threat the Oregonians offered. However, Bob Parke's kicking, time after time sent the home guard back deep in its own territory.

The Eugene boys completed two long passes as the game ended.

Southern California, bounding back from a defeat by Stanford last Saturday, scored first before the game was five minutes old. Warburton kicked out of bounds on Oregon's 4-yard line and the Webfoot return kick carried to the 42-yard line, where Warburton signalled for a fair catch. An over-enthusiastic Oregonian tackled and drew a 15-yard penalty. Gordon Clark fired a pass to Warburton on the 16-yard line.

Warburton fought his way to the 6-yard line, shaking off half a dozen tackles. Cliff Probst charged to the 1-yard line and on the next play slipped over for the first touchdown. Bob Erskine missed the goal.

In the third period, after an exchange of kicks, the ball rested in mid-field. Warburton caught a pass

By Westbrook Pegler.

PRINCETON, N. J., Nov. 18 (Spl.). — The plunk, plunk, plunk of the punt, punt, punt sounded like the beat of tomtoms for an oriental muscle dance as Princeton and the Navy struggled up and down the soggy field throughout the first three quarters of their football game this afternoon. Plunk, plunk, plunk and the football faded into a ceiling as misty and blue as the smoke in a Pullman washroom, in long, high flights which swept the teams from end to end of the greasy sward.

But to shake the news of the afternoon loose from the huddle of this prose, the contest came unstuck in the final period when Homer Spofford, a Princeton sophomore out of New York City, scored two touchdowns. Princeton won 13 to 0. The attempt to score after the first touchdown was a placement kick by Henry Nelson, a tackle, which was deflected and spoiled by the brave, sacrificing countenance of James Fulp, a substitute Navy end, from Greenwood, S. C., who had just relieved his captain, Hugh Murray, of Newman, Ga. The Fulp boy took the wing bag square on his chin fresh from the big lineman's shoe and wobbled under the impact, but scorned to pet his features as though to say that after all, a face was only a face in such a crisis.

Shame On Princeton.

After the second touchdown, a few minutes later, the Princetons went in for sham and pretense. They purported to plan another placement by the same Nelson and went through deceptive rites and motions which completely masked their true intent. As the ball was snapped, Fulp, of Greenwood, came through again and leaped high with his arms outstretched like wings. But instead, the football went to Jack Kadlic, who waved it around somewhat, then threw it on a line to Gil Lea, an end, who was standing beyond the goal line for the catch. He heard its rustle through the fog and caught it by instinct or dead reckoning.

So the gay, proud Princeton youths who were this afternoon one of two teams in the entire country which had not allowed a score all season to date were able to leave the field still in the same proud but precarious status. They had won them all to date. They had beaten Columbia, Brown, Dartmouth and the Navy on the way down to here, and the glory of the Princeton banners was ripening to its historic glow like a tomato in the sun.

It had been a contest crowded with fury, bravery and uncertainty for three sessions and the Midshipmen of Annapolis, rated on their record as slightly inferior in skill,

Pitt Loses Down On Official 'Boner'

Pittsburgh, Nov. 18 (AP).—Officials of the Pitt-Nebraska game here today gained an assist on the Cornhusker goal line just before the end of the first half, when they gave the ball to Nebraska on its own 2-yard line after Pittsburgh had been given only three downs instead of four.

There was a double off-side during the sequence of plays and W. G. Crowell, the referee, and Tom Thorp, the umpire, said they inaccurately counted the play as a down against the Panthers.

Pitt won the game, 6 to 0.

COLUMBUS Ga., Nov. 18 (AP).—Auburn made a place on the mourner's bench for the University of Georgia's National championship contenders by defeating the Bulldogs, 14 to 6, in Memorial Stadium today.

The Georgia football machine was torn to ribbons by a fighting Tiger eleven that upset the dopesters.

Georgia's ball carriers were not under legal arrest today, but they might as well have been for Auburn's battling crew had them as handcuffed as if the little steel bars were tight around their wrists. This Auburn club, beaten three times this season and granted only a featherweight's chance against the rushing Athens Bulldogs, conquerors of Yale and six other rivals, outpointed the Georgians from the outset. They tallied an early touchdown, saw Georgia draw close, and then rolled up another to protect their margin.

12,000 Watch Contest.

The 12,000 spectators gathered for the year's big game for this boundary-line city became hysterical as Auburn stood up and traded gridiron punches with Georgia—beating the Bulldogs to the blow and hitting harder. After the final whistle, the Auburn fans stormed down on the field and uprooted the north goal posts, resisting Georgia efforts to preserve them.

Although Georgia made 13 first downs to Auburn's 11, the Plainsmen far outgained Georgia in net

NEW YORK, Nov. 18 (AP).—The rolling hips of Norman Franklin and the size 12 right hoof of burly Ad Schwammel shattered Fordham's dream of a trip to the Rose Bowl today as Oregon State slaughtered the Rams, 9 to 6, in a sensational intersectional duel.

A crowd of 40,000, shivering in the dampness and gloom of the Polo Grounds, was as stunned as the mighty Fordham array at the suddenness, then the sustained power of Oregon State's beautifully balanced offense.

Smack down under the opening gun, this 160-pound red-headed Franklin, the youngster they say is the best ball-carrier on the Pacific Coast, tucked away the opening kick-off on his own 7-yard line and never did stop until he had danced his way 93 yards through the Fordham defense for the first touchdown of the game.

Disorganized Defense.

It was a magnificent exhibition, the most dazzling broken field running display New York has seen this season, and it completely disorganized a burly Fordham defense that had bowed this fall only to one other team, and that another West Coast invader, St. Mary's Galloping Gaels, 13 to 7, on the same field.

Wiggly as a barrel full of live eels, Franklin took that opening kick-off, a soaring drive that gave the Ram defense every possible

Dominus and Balios, Fitzsimmons Entry, Finish First, Third in Bowie Feature

Kerry Patch Beaten by Nose

War Glory, Choice, and Pomposity Finish Out of Money.

Halcyon Is Winner Over Gold Step; Top High Cops at $25.

TRAINER HARVEY FITZSIMMONS, who learned to prepare horses for races under the eye of his father, "Sunny Jim," sent two very fit 3-year-olds to the post at Bowie yesterday afternoon. And through the fog that was settling over the nearby Maryland course came Dominus, owned by the Belair Stud, to win in a breath-taking finish, with Kerry Patch, the property of Lee Rosenberg. The margin was a nose. Three lengths back and a keen factor in the competition, came H. C. Phipps' Balios, the other half of Trainer Fitzsimmons' entry.

The race was the Prince Georges Autumn Handicap and the weather had moderated enough to fit the name. Any other day of the meeting, Bowie officials could have substituted winter for autumn. However, it would have been a hoss race by any name, as the 12,000 who witnessed the running told the stay-at-homes as they sat down to dinner last night.

War Glory Out of Money.

Out of the money circle ran War Glory, the Glen Riddle Farms' son of Man o' War, installed the favorite by the heavy money betters. He had company, too, in Pomposity, winner of two straight stakes, not to speak of Silent Shot and Inlander.

War Glory and Inlander ran a race of their own at the barrier. The former appeared to want a 10-length lead, breaking through at top speed each time he was led through the gate. The latter was just a big, bad wolf. But bad post manners found War Glory sideways just after the break, while Inlander flattered his backers by going to the front. War Glory and Dominus were closest to the pacesetter as the field banked the clubhouse turn. It was Dominus that moved up on Inlander going up the back stretch, and when the latter had had enough, Jockey Stout, the thin boy, carried on with the Belair stud representative. It was the old game if "catch me if you can."

Dominus Steps Out.

Kerry Patch began his menacing move as the field neared the stretch turn. His advance, under the stinging whip of Robertson, was steady until the sixteenth pole, where Stout found some new speed in Dominus. They locked in the duel, but Kerry Patch wasn't horse enough by several inches.

There was $12.80 waiting at the pay-off windows for all $2 tickets on the entry.

The secondary feature, the Aero, had the favorite players up in the air. The winner turned up in C. V. Whitney's Halcyon, which dropped from 8-1 to 3½-1 on the approximate odds board, and then ran like a 1-100 shot, despite the fact that he was keeping company with Gold Step and Quel Jeu. In fact, Halcyon ran Gold Step into defeat, and was out a length and a quarter at the finish. The pay-off was at $9.60.

Top High Takes Opener.

Top High, the property of Damon Runyon, under a rousing ride by Jim Hunter, youthful apprentice, came from far back to win the first race from a field of 2-year-olds. Slipper King, of the field, was second and Peedeequee was third. Top High was seventh going up the back stretch, but hopped to the lead in a few jumps and won by a neck. Bataille, the favorite, was nowhere in particular. The winner paid $25.20.

Come On, from the G. W. Ogle stable, won the second race over a course of a mile and three-sixteenths. It was another thrilling finish, with Jodhpur the "almost" horse and Spanish Third. Tony Tipton rode one of his good races on the winner. Among the trailers to the swing for the stretch, Come On moved around the field and held on long enough to stall off the closing rush of Jodhpur. Pencader, coupled with Come On, set a burning pace which helped the come-from-behind horses. The entry was the favorite and paid $4.20.

The epidemic of close finishes that have marked Bowie racing was extended into the third race when Brown Jack, Meade up, defeated Captain Argo by a scant nose. The first named set all the pace and many believe that Meade outrode Humphries in the closing sixteenth. At any rate, it was Brown Jack's nostrils in front. Brown Jack was the choice at a $7.60 mutuel.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—TOP HIGH, $25.20, $16.00, $9.60; SLIPPER KING (field), $17.60, $7.80; PEEDEEQUE, $5.40.

TOP HIGH, away quickly, worked his way up stoutly after being straightened on the back stretch, responded to punishment in the closing furlong and outlasted SLIPPER KING. Latter, going in his best form and close up from the start, disposed of PRIZE PACKAGE and held on willingly under a strong drive. PEEDEEQUE, slow to get into full stride, circled his field and finished gamely. PRIZE PACKAGE was rated in front until challenged, then weakened. INFLATE faltered in the final quarter mile. BATAILLE was taken up from the start until reaching the back stretch and could not menace the leaders thereafter. LITTLE CORPORAL had no excuses. LAURETTA NASH came very wide into the home stretch.

SECOND RACE—One and three-sixteenths miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good (from gate). Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 1:34. Off at 1:37. Winner, G. W. †Entry.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—COME ON (entry), $4.60, $2.60, $2.40; JODHPUR, $6.80, $5.80; SPANISH, $6.40.

COME ON, as usual slow to get into racing stride, improved his position readily in the final half mile, swung to the outside of his field entering the home stretch and, finishing fast after being forced wide, was up in the last stride. JODHPUR, going in improved fashion, closed with a stout effort. SPANISH entered contention at the final turn and fought it out gamely. LIGHT BREEZE saved much ground, gained a brief lead, but weakened during the final furlong. PENCADER, taken under stout restraint, bore out badly after reaching the back stretch and continued wide thereafter. BANDERLOG could not better his position. BUBBLING OUT stopped after seven furlongs. TREBOY had early speed.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; the Deep Run; allowances. For 2-year-olds. Start good (from gate). Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 2:06½. Off at 2:08½. Winner, G. D. Two-dollar mutuels paid—BROWN JACK, $7.60, $4.20, $3.00; CAPTAIN ARGO, $6.60, $4.60; MISS MERRIMENT, $2.60.

BROWN JACK, rushed into command at once, came willingly when strongly urged during the final drive and just lasted to withstand CAPTAIN ARGO. Latter, kept close to the leaders, came to the outside and finished with a bold rush in the final drive. MISS MERRIMENT, shuffled back directly after the start, moved up on the outside at the turn and held on well. SIGNALMAN, taken up repeatedly in the first three furlongs, finished on the inside and in tight quarters. NATIONAL ANTHEM could not threaten the leaders. BLACK BEAN broke slowly and was never a factor.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $800; the Aero; allowances. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good (from gate). Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 2:37. Off at 2:38. Winner, C. V. Two-dollar mutuels paid—HALCYON, $9.60, $3.80, $2.40; GOLD STEP, $2.60, $2.10; QUEL JEU, $2.20.

HALCYON, forcing a swift pace from the start, wore GOLD STEP down when entering the home stretch and, stoutly handled until the finish, drew out gradually. GOLD STEP, hustled to the front, saved much ground and continued courageously. QUEL JEU lost ground at the turn and then made up some ground during the stretch drive. FORTUNATE YOUTH was never able to better his position. The others were held safe.

FIFTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $2,500 added; the Prince George Autumn Handicap. For 3-year-olds. Start poor (from gate). Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:11. Off at 3:17½. Two-dollar mutuels paid—DOMINUS (entry), $12.80, $5.20, $7.80; KERRY PATCH, $4.40, $3.00; BALIOS (entry), $7.80.

DOMINUS, away in the first flight and kept close to the leaders, wore INLANDER down when reaching the final turn and, stoutly punished, just lasted to stall off KERRY PATCH. Latter worked his way up strongly on the outside, drew on practically equal terms with the winner inside the final sixteenth, but appeared to weaken right at the end. BALIOS moved up strongly approaching the home stretch and finished with good courage. WAR GLORY beat the others away, but was not good enough after being rated in the first six furlongs. SILENT SHOT showed a good effort. POMPOSITY was away in a tangle and had little chance. INLANDER was rushed into the lead, but tired badly when put to a drive.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good (from gate). Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:47. Off at 3:49½. Winner, B. B. Two-dollar mutuels paid—CHARLIE K, $16.60, $9.80, $4.80; FAIRLY WILD, $10.20, $6.80; UNCLE DONALD, $3.60.

CHARLIE K. taken into command when reaching the back stretch, stalled off stout contention from RENEWED in the first seven furlongs and had enough left to stall off FAIRLY WILD. Latter entered contention with good speed and closed stoutly. He would have been a keener factor with smoother handling. UNCLE DONALD, rated close to the leaders, hung when put to severe pressure at the stretch turn. POLO BAR circled his field and finished with a rush. MAJOR GENERAL showed a good effort. FABIUS was steered extremely wide in the last half mile to close a big gap. SILVERDALE and RENEWED tired.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—ARAB, $11.60, $10.60, $6.60; MODERN TIMES, $5.20, $3.80; ATHOL, $6.80.

ARAB, squeezed back going to first turn, was allowed to settle in his stride before going into contention; came around his company with a rush and came out nicely in the stretch run. MODERN TIMES, placed forwardly and going in improved fashion, finished with good energy. ATHOL, hustled into a clear lead and saving ground, tired fast in the last quarter mile. POLITEN went stoutly all the way. CHIEF'S TROUBADOUR raced in spots. FAUX PAS closed some ground in the late stages. JANE ELLEN stopped, as did KING BIRD.

Around the Ring . . .

By Bill McCormick.

IT would seem to behoove whoever should be behooved when it is time to be behooved over Henry Irving to coax the Northeast noggin-knocker from his beer truck, dust him off, brush the cobwebs from his boxing, and prepare him for a return to the big money. For Young Van is returning to the wars. Returning for no other purpose than to work up to a bout in which he can pit his classic profile against the sturdy right hand of Henry Irving—for 20 per cent of a $2,000 gate.

Henry Irving can make more money flinging that right hand against Young Van for one round than he can make fighting other—and perhaps better—opposition six days a week and four shows on Sunday. The trouble with Hank is that he is either too good or too bad for the usual opposition.

The minute a two-line notice appears on the end of a boxing story informing the world that "in the semifinal Henry Irving and Joe Doaks will annoy the customers into an appreciation of the main bout," the boxing-wise public knows at once that either Joe Doaks will punch Irving into a state of temporary mental incompetence or that Irving will punch Joe Doaks as flat as an uncorked bottle of 3.2.

But, when Irving fights Van, no one knows what will happen. So, it behooves the behoovers to start preparing Hank for the sudden shock of a rapid ascent from $2.98 (when you get it) purses to the realms of real ring earnings.

Manley Becoming Orthodox.

Roy Manley, he of the mule-like left-hand kick, is turning right-hander. Tired of being shunned, as only southpaw fighters and those people in advertisements whose best friends won't tell them, are shunned, the "Arkansas Plowboy" has abandoned his portside fist-flinging in an effort to become popular. He would like to try out his right-hand style against Ray Bowen, but, to hear Manley tell it, he remains unpopular with Ray Bowen, no matter what he does.

"'Fats' Cornell offered Bowen 20 per cent of the gate to fight me at Twin City," weeps Manley, shedding tears like a Vassar girl barred from the daisy chain by the four-year rule. "But Bowen wouldn't have no parts of me. So here I am, broken-hearted and disgruntled."

Cheer up Roy, we once knew a fellow who gargled three times a day, consumed a carload of yeast cakes, took piano lessons by correspondence and read fifteen minutes a day—and still wasn't popular.

Jimmy Erwin, who seems well on the way to becoming a refuge for fighters who won't otherwise train, has taken unto himself Walter Kirkwood, to be pounded into fighting condition. Kirkwood is one of the best middleweights ever to land around these parts, but so far he has been pretty hopeless simply because he refused to adhere to a training schedule.

Erwin has had remarkable success with others of the same ilk, namely Bob Tow, who just detests training for anyone else, and Reds Barry, who didn't do so well under his New York managers. Come to think of it, he even got old Jimmy De Capua into good enough condition to smack a mediocre heavyweight about for four rounds. And anyone who can get Jimmy De Capua into good enough condition to stand up four rounds with a heavyweight can probably have Kirkwood ready to fight Max Baer in a few weeks.

The same week that Joe Knight stopped him in five rounds, Bob Godwin fought the highly touted heavyweight Corn Griffin . . . and stopped him in five . . . Bob is noncommittal about the Knight knockout . . . but admits he didn't take Joe seriously . . . and says he couldn't again . . . it's bound to happen once and awhile against a stiff puncher . . . Harry Grove is all pepped up over the prospects of Joe Green . . . and Bob Lowry has about decided to stick to the rule he has followed in his last two fights . . . of hitting not so often but harder.

British United And Mitchell To Battle

MITCHELL'S STORE and British United will clash in the feature soccer match today on the Monument Grounds at 2 o'clock. Five other games are listed in the Capital City and Recreation Leagues, but this contest will draw the bulk of the fans.

The Mitchell kickers scored a surprise two weeks ago when they opened the season in the Capital City League with a 4-to-1 triumph over the veteran Marlboro eleven. Last Sunday Mitchell proved this victory was no flash in the pan by defeating the Brandywine eleven, 6-1.

In Bailey, Lewis and Shelton on the forward line the Grocerymen compare favorably in this department with any team in the league. Randolph Mitchell and Guntow form a defense that any team will find difficulty in penetrating.

Is in Top Shape.

British United started slowly this season, but now is in top shape. The Britishers recently signed Johnny Malloch and Jess Burton. The addition of these stars unquestionably made the team a strong contender for the league championship. McLaren, Gunn and Blanche also are of much help to the Uniteds. It would not surprise the critics to see this afternoon's contest end in a 1-to-1 draw.

The Dux A. C. and Virginia will furnish the chief entertainment in the Recreation League. The former, composed entirely of Italians, seems to be greatly improved over last year, while Virginia Avenue is playing its first season in the Recreation circuit. The Dux should win by a narrow margin. The match will start at 1 o'clock on Monument Field No. 2.

German-Americans will be hosts to Rockville on the Benning Field at 2:30 o'clock, and if the former plays the same brand of soccer it did last Sunday, Rockville is in for a busy afternoon.

Senators Face Marlboro.

The newly organized Senators will play Marlboro at Marlboro. The Senators are composed mainly of players who were with the old Rosedale Club. "Spike" Wilson is managing the Senators, as he did Rosedale.

Brandywine should get its second victory in fourteen starts today, when it is host to Gaithersburg. Manager Higgins has an improved club.

New York Avenue and Takoma Park are scheduled to play on Monument No. 1 at 1 o'clock, and here is another case of anybody's game, with a possible slight edge to Takoma. Abby Clark is expected to be back in the New York Avenue line-up for the first time since the training season, when he broke his arm.

Tomorrow night at 7:30 o'clock the Washington and Southeastern District Soccer Association will meet in Room 313, District Building. Those expected to be present include Merton Duvall, David Adamson, Bernard McCarty, Franklin Carr, Richard S. Tennyson, Barnard Welsh, Mike Wyville and Richard Dietle.

Foglietto and Von Reedon To Clash

Bout One of 8-Rounders Scheduled at Portner's Tuesday Night.

SOMEWHERE in the welter of a varied assortment of pugilists to be tossed into the ring Tuesday on the Portner "all-star" card there may lurk a surprisingly good bout. Three eight rounders and a six offer the possibilities. The six is a substitute for the eight-rounder between Ken Overlin and Roxy Allen, canceled because of a fractured rib the former sustained in a winning fight against Tommy Rios at Norfolk last week.

Most of the ring fans are looking to the Joe Foglietto-Charley Von Reedon eight-rounder to steal most of the thunder. Foglietto made an impressive debut here a few weeks ago by pounding Le Roy Dougan practically bowlegged in a hotly contested match. He is strictly a club fighter, disdaining ring generalship and boxing in favor of aggressive boring-in. Von Reedon is a good boxer, who possesses a respected wallop in both hands.

Taylor Faces Davis.

Buck Taylor gets another chance to try his up-and-coming skill against the up-and-coming skill of Roddy Davis in another eight that may walk away with the show. Cheated out of a chance to work the distance by a cut over his eye which necessitated the bout being stopped, Taylor has been angling for a crack at the Northeast tow-head for some time. He has it now, and in the opinion of many close followers of the ring, his superior punch may chop Davis down.

Carey Wright, believed by many to be the most promising welterweight prospect uncovered hereabouts in a number of years, will step into faster than usual company against Charley Gomer in the remaining eight. Despite his impressive winning record, Wright still remains more or less an unknown quantity to ring fans, but a win over the experienced Gomer probably would establish him as an outstanding prospect.

Iowa U. Knocks Purdue Out of Big Ten Race With First Defeat in 21 Starts

LAFAYETTE, Ind., Nov. 18 (AP).—Iowa's Hawkeyes arose to heroic heights today to crush mighty Purdue, 14 to 6, and lay in wreckage the Boilermakers' chances for the 1933 Western Conference gridiron championship.

The Hawkeyes, who had thoroughly outplayed the Boilermakers in the first two periods, came back in the second half twice as tough and about midway of the third session, scored the first touchdown. Another came in the fourth, while Purdue, was able to score only through an unusual break in the fourth quarter.

Laws Scores Markers.

To Joe Laws,, 175-pound quarter back from Colfax, Iowa, went the glory of scoring both Hawkeye touchdowns, both on long, sparkling runs.

Starting on their own 33-yard line, the Hawkeyes, with Crayne literally dragging Purdue tacklers, advanced the ball to the Purdue 27-yard stripe. Laws took the ball and started wide around Purdue's left end. He was hemmed in and cut back through tackle. He cut toward the side lines, and side stepped the Purdue safety man to negotiate the last two steps over the goal line.

A quick kick by Crayne set the stage for the second touchdown. His boot traveled to the Boilermaker 15, where Page downed it. After losing 3 yards, Purvis kicked to Laws, who hugged the ball to his chest on his own 45-yard mark, raced up the west sideline until a mass of interference collected in front of him, then swung to the right and over the line.

The defeat ended Purdue's long string of victories it being the Boilermakers' first beating in 21 starts, or since Wisconsin won, 21 to 14, in 1930.

Manhattan Wins Over Catholic U.

yet he kept his team in the ball game often when it was backed up to its goal line.

The first quarter found the Cardinals receiving Pendergast's kick-off and the play remained in Catholic territory throughout, except for the exchanges Welch returned from his side. Augusterfer blocked beautifully at one point when Welch's punt trickled over the line for a touchback. He failed in the second attempt at this strategy and C. U. was forced to take the ball on the 4-yard line.

Welch Goes Over.

Six line substitutes held and Oliver kicked from behind his goal Pendergast made a first down on the 11-year mark before leaving the game for Spellman, who tossed a 10-yard pass to Barkaus. Welch bucked over for the touchdown after an offside penalty. Spellman's placement kick was good for the extra point.

For the rest of the period the Cardinals gained consistently, but to no avail. As the half time approached, Finn was inserted to open up a passing attack. It failed when Thibodeau let two perfect tosses roll off his fingers. C. U. made good on only one of 14 passes during the entire game.

Mulligan Is Ejected.

At the start of the second half the Cards began a sustained drive, ending in Manhattan's territory when Jankowski slipped and fumbled. Another push, with the Gearty brothers carrying for consistent gains, ended on the Jaspers' 28-yard line. C. U. was placed on the defensive for the remainder of the game as Mulligan apparently slugged a Manhattan player. He was ejected from the game and C. U. penalized half the distance to their goal. This added greatly to the Cards negative yardage which totaled 110 to Manhattan's 40 in penalties.

Features of the third period were the inability of the Cardinals to take advantage of any of the breaks presented them, and Pendergast's 36-yard sweep around end for the only long gain of the day.

The game ended with Catholic U. passing wildly.

Penn Military Gives Army Scare

West Point, Led by Buckler, Rallies Near End to Win Out, 12 to 0.

WEST POINT, N. Y., Nov. 18 (AP).—Halted time and again by the surprising defensive strength of Pennsylvania Military College, Army came on with a rush in the fourth quarter today to score two touchdowns, earn a 12-0 victory and stretch its winning streak through eight successive games without defeat or tie.

Blanked for three periods in a contest the West Point Cadets had been expected to win decisively without the necessity of calling on its regulars, Army finally came to life in the final quarter to save itself from what threatened to develop into one of the major upsets of an already bewildering season.

And as has been the case in nearly every other one of the Cadets' victories, it was Texas Jack Buckler who finally solved the problem Penn Militarys' tight defense had presented.

Buckler Starts Drive.

Buckler started late in the third quarter with a series of smashes off tackle and end sweeps, and had carried the ball to the P. M. C. 21-yard line as the period ended. As the fourth opened, Buckler swirled through tackle for the rest of the yardage and the first touchdown of the game.

A few seconds later, just to make it decisive, Buckler and Paul Johnson alternated in smashes at the Pennsylvanians' line to carry the ball from midfield to the P. M. C. 8-yard marker. Then Buckler flew wide around end for the second score.

The muddy and soggy field may have had something to do with Army's poor showing in the first three periods, but the fact remains that Penn Military put a surprisingly strong and threatening team on the field.

Trojans Winners Over Oregon, 26-0

from Cal Clemens and ran to Oregon's 36-yard line. Warburton added six and then a first down on the 24-yard line. Clemens picked up five and Warburton made a first down on the 14-yard line. Haskell Wotkyns went over for the touchdown. Larry Stevens missed the goal.

Just as the third period ended, Warburton grabbed a pass from Clemens on Southern California's 46-yard line and ran 54 yards for the third touchdown. The mite galloped along behind a lot of interference, personally directing his mates as he pointed out men to take out.

The final touchdown was scored with half a minute to play as the Trojan line-up was composed largely of replacements. Bill Howard, substitute quarter, plunged over from the 1-yard line after a pass from Howard to Bright had sent the ball inside Oregon's 20-yard line. Howard also kicked the goal.

Kansas, Held Scoreless For 5 Games, Wins, 20-6

Lawrence, Kans., Nov. 18 (AP).—The Kansas Jayhawkers, held scoreless in five successive games, resurrected an attack strong enough to defeat Iowa State, 20 to 6, before 6,000 spectators here today.

Casini, Jayhawk end, drew the honor of ending his Big Six club's long touchdown famine, scoring before the game was well under way on a 30-yard forward pass from Manning.

Chicago Holds Illinois to 7-0 Win

Inspired Team Outgains Foe, Fails Near Goal in Closing Minutes.

MEMORIAL STADIUM, Champaign, Ill., Nov. 18 (AP).—Illinois needed all its traditional "fight" today to earn a 7-to-0 football victory over an inspired University of Chicago team.

The Illini, heavily favored in advance, were forced to battle their hardest for the only touchdown they scored, and then to stand off a last-minute drive, which ended only one yard from the goal.

The Maroons gained 55 yards with two unerring passes as the final seconds ticked away, but they reverted to ground plays eight yards from the goal. It was then that the Illini line, a sieve during most of the afternoon, stubbornly dug in, piled up four Chicago smashes with a total gain of seven yards, and allowed Half Back Les Lindberg to punt out safely, clinching the victory.

Pass Brings Score.

That magnificent goal line defense allowed the margin of victory to lie upon a brilliant pass from Quarter Back Jack Beynon to little Crain Portman near the end of the second period.

Jay Berwanger, Chicago's sterling half back, was forced to punt from the end zone, and Left End Fred Frink of Illinois partly blocked it. The Illini took the ball on the 23-yard line. Two plays gained four yards, and Beynon, the passing sensation of the conference season, tossed a soft spot pass to Portman. The 152-pound half back from Urbana, playing in his second varsity game, took the ball five yards from the goal, brushed aside the blundering efforts of two tacklers, and fell behind the end zone for a touchdown.

Five First Downs to Nine.

Illinois gained only five first downs to nine for Chicago, and 92 yards by rushing, against 193 for Chicago.

V. M. I. Again Bows To Richmond, 15-0

Schultz Dashes 67 Yards to Score Final Tally.

Richmond, Va., Nov. 18 (AP).—The powerful University of Richmond Spiders today piled two fourth-period touchdowns on top of a first-period field goal in defeating, 15 to 0, the V. M. I. Cadets for the third consecutive year.

Sonny Joyce gave the Spiders a 3-to-0 lead in the opening period with a field goal from placement on the 20-yard line.

In the final quarter Perry Schultz ran 67 yards to score standing up.

The second touchdown came a few moments later when Chaltain smashed over for the necessary yard to maintain his record of a touchdown a year against the Cadets. His scoring in the two previous years was the deciding factor in as many games.

A Cadet threat in the second period proved to be their best chance, but it was stopped when the Spiders took the ball on downs on their 9-yard line.

Billy Smith's passes were a constant menace over the Richmond heads. They were big factors in gaining V. M. I.'s nine first downs against six for Richmond.

Harvard Lucky To Win Over Brown, 12-6

Recovers Ball on 11-Yard Line After Bad Pass of Sub Center.

HARVARD STADIUM, Cambridge, Mass., Nov. 18 (U.P.).—Hapless Harvard scored the first major victory of its season today by defeating a hard-playing Brown University team, 12 to 6, before a crowd of 18,000.

Outrushed and outpassed, Harvard nevertheless was able to capitalize on a freak break in the third period to score the touchdown which proved to be the margin of victory.

Led by the classy backs—Karaban, Walker and Buonanno—Brown remained a constant threat until the last minute of play, when Gundlach, Harvard guard, intercepted a Brown pass and safeguarded the Crimson lead.

Harvard and Brown scored two of the touchdowns after marches of 64 and 68 yards, respectively. Harvard's second and winning touchdown came abruptly in the third period after Payne, substitute Brown center, had passed wildly over Walker's head on Brown's 39-yard line.

Wells recovered for Harvard on the 11-yard line.

Litman Makes Score.

After one line play, Litman raced around his right end from the 8-yard line for the touchdown. Wells failed in two attempts to kick the extra point, Brown having been offside on the first try.

yardage, accumulating 310 yards to 182. Auburn flicked twice with long passes, one going for a touchdown. Jack Williams directed his maneuvers with the artistry of an all-American. He decided to gamble heavily and to strike early. And he started his march in the first period from his own 20. Mixing spinners, with off-tackle slants and passes, he drove the Plainsmen 80 yards, with Talley crashing through the hitherto vaunted Georgia forewall for the touchdown. Ariail, an all-Southern end a year ago, who played brilliantly today, place-kicked the first of his two extra points.

Runs 62 Yards.

After the kick-off, Phipps cut loose from his 12 and traveled 62 yards before he was run out of bounds by Key. But Talley fumbled and Shi, substitute tackle, recovered for the Bulldogs on Georgia's 27.

For Georgia's only score, Al Minot, substitute full back, shot off tackle—moving so fast that he was shoving his interferers out of the way—and raced ahead. Griffin blocked the last Auburn tackle out, and Minot's 52-yard touchdown run had put Georgia back into the battle.

Amherst Bows, 14-0, To Williams Gridmen

Williamstown, Mass., Nov. 18 (U.P.).—Williams found its stride today as it smashed to a 14-0 victory over Amherst, traditional rival, on Weston Field before a crowd of 5,000.

Displaying a brilliant brand of football characterized by smashing offense and hard-tackling defensive play, the Purple battered the Amherst line hard as it slashed through for two touchdowns.

McInerney and Holmes made the touchdowns. Lamberton kicked both extra points.

Cornell Downs Dartmouth 2d in Row

Substitute Makes Score Before 8,000 Fans; Lateral Effective.

HANOVER, N. H., Nov. 18 (AP).—Cornell used only one substitute today, but that player, Full Back Albert Frederick, was the one whose 8-yard third period run on the end of a lateral pass from Walter Switzer, scored the touchdown that gave Dobie's Big Red eleven a 7-0 victory over Dartmouth on Memorial Field here today.

A small crowd of 8,000 braved the wintry elements, which had given the surrounding countryside a blanket of white, to watch Cornell defeat Dartmouth for the second consecutive year, and hand the Indians their first defeat at home since the Brown Bear turned the trick with a 14-0 victory here in 1928.

his line and ran 32 yards before he was downed on Nebraska's 10-yard marker.

He and Shedosky picked up 7 yards on three plays and the latter then drifted back and tossed a 20-yard pass to little Mike Nicksick far over in the corner and behind the goal line. Bernie Masterson, Husker quarter back, leaped high in the air in an effort to stop the ball, but it floated safely down into Nicksick's arms for a touchdown.

Fails to Kick Point.

Izzie Weinstock was rushed in to kick the point—he had not failed before this year—and he missed it; as it turned out, the point was not needed, the Panthers threatening the Husker goal through all the rest of the period and stopping the Big Red passing attack.

The Cornhuskers never got inside Pitt's 20-yard line.

The statistics of the game, even better than the score, show the decided superiority of the Panthers who rolled up the amazing net total of 276 yards through the line in 63 attempts, an average of over 4 yards on each plunge and made 17 first downs to 7 for the invaders.

Oregon State Beats Rams By 9-6

chance, and started down the center of the field. But he was only fooling.

The moment he had drawn the Fordham defense toward the center he swerved like a gyro top toward his left, and left the maroon-shirted Rams flatfooted. Down the sideline he threaded his way, stepping daintily, almost picking each footprint in advance, as the desperate Fordham defense staggered after him.

Makes Futile Dive.

Only one man, Frank McDermott, the Fordham quarter back, really had a chance to stop him. On his own 40-yard line, the safety man made his try with a despairing dive. Franklin stepped out of McDermott's arms as though he were going over a low hurdle and pranced onto the goal line, all alone and still so full of run it looked for a moment as though he'd continue right up into the stands for a snack of refreshments while the rest of the boys pulled themselves together.

Franklin never did get loose again for anything like that performance, but he was the guiding genius in an attempt that never let up, piled up 132 yards from scrimmage to Fordham's 71, and made 9 first downs to 11 for the local athletes. His scoring for the day was ended, however, after that one play.

Fordham Comes Back.

So, but for the tremendous pedal of Schwammel, 213 pounds of tackle and about as good as anything the East has seen this fall, the Far Westerners, despite their all-round superiority in everything but passing and first downs, might have had to content themselves with a tie.

For Fordham came back in the second quarter, capitalized one of the fumbles that sprinkled both attacks, and tied the score at 6-6. Hal Joslin let the leather go, giving Fordham the ball on the Oregon State 34-yard line, putting the Beavers in a hole they never did get out of until Ed Danowski plunged over from a yard away for the score. One of the 10 passes Fordham completed for 117 yards picked up 25 yards after Danowski spoiled the first drive by fumbling. Then from 20 yards away the Rams hit the line until Danowski went over.

Starts Another Drive.

Both tries for the extra point went wide, so Oregon State had to start all over again. Another ghostly figure named Johnny Biancone, no bigger than Franklin, took the red head's place and set the Beavers afire again. Cutting inside the tackles he came 35 yards in three plays but the attack stalled on Fordham's 27 after traveling 67 yards.

So Schwammel, covered with dirt and very weary, pulled out of the line. His try for Oregon State's point after touchdown had been wide from only 15 yards away. This time he stood on the Rams' 37 and the goal posts, 10 yards behind the goal line, were 47 yards away. He cut loose with a tremendous boot and the ball descended squarely over the cross-bar, just good enough for the field goal and Oregon State's winning 3-point margin.

California Break Defeats Idaho, 6-0

Bears Are Unimpressive in Lucky Victory.

Berkeley, Calif., Nov. 18 (AP).—Pushing Idaho's stubborn Vandals all over the middle of the field but across the goal line only once, California's Golden Bears registered an unimpressive 6-to-0 victory before some 15,000 fans here today.

Six times the Bears were in possession of the ball in scoring territory, but only in the third period, after a march from the Idaho 43-yard mark, did they cross the final chalk mark.

The touchdown California scored came on a break. Driving in from the 5-yard line, Keefer, Bear full back, fumbled the ball, which rolled to the 1-yard mark. Out of a mad scramble Lutz, Bear tackle, came up with the ball, and Keefer on the next play plowed through for the only score of the day.

W. & J. Loses To Temple, 13-0

Stevens' Passes to Watts Bring Both Scores.

Philadelphia, Nov. 18 (U.P.).—Temple University defeated Washington and Jefferson, 13-0, today in a game filled with fumbles and fights.

Both Temple touchdowns, one in the third and one in the fourth period, were made by Watts, quarterback, following passes from Stevens.

Streak of Utah Ended by Denver

Utes Lose 1st Conference Game Since 1927.

Denver, Nov. 18 (AP).—The University of Utah football dynasty was swept out of power in the Rocky Mountain Conference here today by an alert, defensively brilliant brand of Denver pioneers. The score was 13-0. It marked the first conferance defeat of the Redskins since 1927.

A 58-yard pass, Walton to Jorgenson, on the third play of the second period, produced the first Denver touchdown after the Utes had knocked unsuccessfully at the Pioneer goal line four times.

The second Denver score came with equal suddenness in the middle of the final quarter after Joe Fena, Pioneer tackle, had grounded a punt on Utah's 13-yard stripe. Fena rushed Hack Davies, Ute captain, on the latter's punt, blocked it, and recovered for a touchdown as the Utah leader fumbled over the goal line.

Columbia 46-6 Victor Over Lafayette

Montgomery Stars as New Yorkers Surprise With One-Sided Triumph.

NEW YORK, N. Y., Nov. 18 (AP).—Columbia's high-powered football machine furnished a surprise by overwhelming Lafayette, 46-6, on a snow-sprinkled gridiron here today.

A crowd of 15,000 saw Lou Little's team reveal a brilliant and varied offense and convert what had been expected to be a close contest into the most one-sided of the season for the Blue and White.

Except for a brief period at the opening of the second half, when Charles Stabley, Lafayette half back, cut through tackle from his own 24-yard line on the first play of the period and ran 76 yards for a touchdown, Columbia completely dominated the scoring. Following this sole Maroon tally, the Lions retaliated by adding three touchdowns in that period to double its first-half total and turn the game into a runaway.

Montgomery Is Hero.

Capt. Clifford Montgomery, of the Lions, was the outstanding figure of the day, punting, passing and carrying the ball for gain after gain while he was in the contest. He shared scoring honors with Alfred Barabas, sophomore half back, each of whom tallied two touchdowns. The others were scored by Tony Matal, end; Ed Brominski, half back, and Sam Maniaci, half back, who replaced Barabas in the second half.

Alabama Winner As Howell Stars

Georgia Tech Bows, 12-9, in Exciting Game.

Atlanta, Nov. 18 (AP).—Millard Howell, the Hartford, Ala., express, struck two sudden and decisive blows today to lead Alabama's Crimson Tide to a 12-9 victory over Georgia Tech in the season's most exciting football contest on Grant Field.

The Crimson back went over for the first touchdown on the second play of the game after Alabama recovered a fumble within the Engineers' 10-yard line and pulled the contest out of the fire with a scoring drive that carried over half the distance of the field in the final quarter.

In the second period Howell fumbled behind his goal line and Hughes, Alabama half back, recovered to give Tech a safety and 2 points. With Phillips on the heaving end of passes, the Georgians started a fourth march in the third period which netted a score and a 3-point margin.

Howell swept around his right end for a touchdown in the fourth period. Hutson's kick failed.

55-Yard Jaunt Ohio State's Margin

Smith's Run in Second Minute of Play Beats Wisconsin, 6-0.

MADISON, Wis., Nov. 18 (AP).—A touchdown scored on a 55-yard run by Jack Smith in the opening minutes of play gave Ohio State a 6-to-0 victory over a fighting Wisconsin eleven here today.

Outweighed almost 20 pounds to the man, the Badgers put up a thrilling battle against their experienced opponents, outscoring the Buckeyes in first downs, 9 to 6, and throwing a scare into the invaders by marching 55 yards to the 15-yard line before a bad pass from center halted the drive.

Smith's long run came in the second minute of play. Stan Pincura passed laterally behind the line to Smith, who cut off left tackle and scampered down the left side lines. Joe Gailus and Fred Conrad took out the Badger right end and right half back, respectively, and Smith outsprinted the rest of the Wisconsin secondary which was slow in going across on the play.

Maryland Frosh Beat V. M. I., 40-24

Lexington, Va., Nov. 18—Led by Guyckeson, a substitute back who scored four touchdowns, three of them in the third quarter, the Maryland Freshmen defeated the Virginia Military Institute Freshmen today by the score of 40-24. Clark ran through the Maryland team for the second of his three touchdowns.

Maryland made ten first downs and V. M. I. made eight in this game which was replete with long runs, sleeping end plays, Statue of Liberty passes and many fumbles.

Rutgers, N. Y. U. Fight to 6-6 Tie

New York, N. Y., Nov. 18 (U.P.).—A hard-fighting Rutgers University football team today registered an upset by holding New York University's Violets to a 6-to-6 tie before 10,000 fans at Yankee Stadium.

Both touchdowns were made in the second period. New York U. started the scoring on the second play in that session when Eddie Smith, left half, faded back to Rutgers' 47-yard stripe and passed 15 yards toward Irwin Klein, right end. George Kramer, Rutgers sub quarter back, knocked the ball into Klein's arms, and Klein sprinted 32 yards for the New York U touchdown. White's attempted kick for the extra point hit the goal post.

In the closing minutes of the same period, Rutgers evened the count. Al Twitchell of Rutgers recovered New York U.'s fumble on the latters 26 line. After a line buck, Kramer passed to Louis Hemedra, right half, who was downed on New York U.'s 3-yard line. Hemerda skirted left end on a reverse and plunged over the line for a Rutgers touchdown. Truex missed the kick.

Techmen Get Three Honor Places

De Lisio, Dunn, Pistolas, Kocsis Represent Champions.

Western, Eastern Land Two Berths Each on Mythical Eleven.

By Chick Kenny.

It is always customary to commence one of these All-High dissertations with profound apologies for whatever injustice might be done those deserving young men who must remain just outside the pale of all-star ranking, and to temper their disappointment by emphasizing the difficulty of the task of making the All-High selections.

Well, to be blunt about it, it wasn't much of a job this season. In virtually every position, there was a single stand-out player. Only the ends and the center jobs required the proverbial hair-line decisions. The rest were easy.

Five Central Men Named.

So, with no further ceremony, I give you The Washington Post's All-High eleven for 1933:

Ends—De Lisio, Central; Coiner, Tech.
Tackles—Gamage, Western; Campbell, Eastern.
Guards—Pistolas, Central; Geiger, Tech.
Center—Dunn, Central.
Quarter back—Corcoran, Western.
Halfbacks—Joe Mills, Eastern; Heatwole, Tech.
Full back—Kocsis, Central.

Thus the glory that was Central's in the recently concluded series is reflected in the All-High selections, which find four members of the championship team given places in the line-up. McKinley Tech landed three gridders, Western two, and Eastern two. Roosevelt, which wound up in the cellar position, failed to show.

De Lisio and Coiner Ends.

At the ends—Leonard De Lisio, Central, and Bill Coiner, of Tech. They were outstanding in the interhigh series by a mosquito's eye lash over Wheedon, Central, and Thompson, Eastern. All four were adept at nabbing air-line heaves and were steady, capable defensive performers. They were tough men for the interfering backs to handle and were seldom, if at all, "sucked" out of a play. However, Coiner and De Lisio received passes at the opportune time and scored.

At the tackles—Bob Gamage, of Western, and Bob Campbell of Eastern. Holmes of Central, was the only other outstanding tackle in the series, but the flip of the coin to decide between Campbell and Holmes fell "heads" and Campbell won. Gamage was the outstanding lineman in the series. Often he was attempting to stem the tide on the opposite side of the line. His sterling play was most noticeable against the stronger teams in the loop. Either Campbell or the curley headed Holmes is an excellent running mate for the redoubtable Bob of Western. Like the Georgetown flash, both are fundamentally alert, have speed and are deadly tacklers. Josselyn of Tech, comes closest to this trio.

Pistolas, Geiger Best Guards.

At the guards—Capt. Nick Pistolas, of Central, and Chick Geiger, of Tech. Both lads could slide back to break up passes, stop center-line smashes with equal dexterity and, above all, line leaders. Neither was fooled by tricky spinners or fake plays through the line. Both played heads-up football throughout the season. Nicopoulous, of Central, and Absher, of Eastern, were other good scholastic guards.

At center—Dunn, of Central. Here again, the margin of comparison was so close between the Mount Pleasant snapper-back and Baxter, of Tech, that the writer had to concentrate throughout the ball game of the respective teams to see which was the better. Dunn came through with a rush after he had won a regular berth. Both were responsible for no bad passes, either short or long, which is something of an achievement for a high school pivot man. Both chugged through the center of the opposition to throw the offensive backs for grand losses. However, the Tech-Central game decided the issue, or rather the champion football team as well as the outstanding center of the interhigh series.

Corcoran Outstanding.

At quarter back—Jim Corcoran, of Western. If Wstern had a team to command that had been equipped with the knowledge of fundamentals of the pigskin game, then maybe the little quarter back would be the class of the interhigh backfield, would have led in scoring touchdowns and everything else that a good football team of championship calber is expected to do. But Jimmy had none of this—only Gamage on the line and a flock of awkward inexperienced tonnage. Corcoran could carry the ball and direct the team and could pass as well as the best of them—but what is a fellow going to do without a team? Dunlap, of central, looks like the goods next to Jimmy.

At the half back positions—Holes Heatwole, of Tech, and Joe Mills, of Eastern. Heatwole was the best open field and fastest runner in the league. He picked his holes with equal precision. Consequently, he was gifted with back field football brains and instinct. He featured best when the going was toughest. And this also can be said of Joe Mills. Joe was out there battling the whole way. He could kick, pass and diagnose the enemy play with uncanny ability. He was a twelfth man on a team and one of the most outstanding ball players Eastern has ever had.

Kocsis Has No Rival.

At full back—Frank Kocsis, of Central. This position was easy.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 18 (AP).—Two touchdowns in the first three minutes of play took the life out of the Kentucky Wildcats today, and Tulane crushed them, 34 to 0, in a spectacular display of back-field speed and line power.

The score could have been doubled, but after chalking up four touchdowns in the first period and one early in the second the Green Wave coasted with second and third string men, using 32 players in all. "Preacher" Roberts, captain and half back, started the slaughter by taking the first kick-off back 55 yards and then carried it 25 more for the first touchdown. Two minutes later he raced 20 yards for the second touchdown.

Then Farrell Thomas came into the game at half back and gave a demonstration of speed to flash over three more touchdowns that made the fast Roberts look slow.

Great Demonstration.

Tulane's play in the first quarter was a great demonstration of football, the kind that brought the 12,000 spectators shouting to their feet all through the quarter. Running, blocking, passing and defense worked like a charm while Kentucky's game in all departments appeared to collapse.

Kentucky seriously threatened to score only once—in the last quarter when they almost completed a pass, Kercheval to Rupert, over the goal line. Kentucky completed only one forward pass during the game.

Peterson, Trick-Shot Cueist, Here Tuesday

A rare treat is promised District billiard enthusiasts at the Lewis & Krauss parlors next Tuesday night, when Charlie Peterson, one of the world's greatest trick-shot artists, will appear. The last time Peterson appeared here—in championship play for the world's trick-shot title, which he lost to Ribas—the program called for well-nigh impossible shots and neither made a good showing.

Tuesday, however, Peterson will use his own repertoire, guaranteeing a pleasing performance. Preceding the exhibition of trick and fancy shots, Peterson will give a lecture on the game. No admission will be charged for the event, which gets under way at 7:45 o'clock.

At 9 o'clock, Peterson will appear at the Arcadia. The exhibition has been arranged by the National Billboard Association.

CARD ATTENDANCE LOW.

Unofficial records showed total attendance at 1933 home games of the St. Louis Cardinals the lowest in eight years.

Built like a full back, looking like a full back and doing everything that a full back should do, as well as some extra work, Frank was the outstanding high school football player of the year. He possessed a bone-powdering drive that carried the opposition with him. His drive was terrific and he was never down until the shrill blast of the referee's whistle terminated the down. Every time Kocsis lugged the ball the yardage averaged at least seven yards' gain. In fact, Frank Kocsis won Central its 1933 football championship.

DUKE STADIUM, Durham, N. C., Nov. 18 (AP).—Duke University's powerful football team continued its march toward the mythical National football crown today by defeating North Carolina U., 21 to 0, before the South's largest crowd of the season and a new high attendance for a North Carolina gridiron battle.

Something more than 30,000 persons watched Wallace Wade's brilliant line and crafty back field outplay the Tarheels in every department in the first and last quarters, while the "first stringers" were in the battle and in the second and third quarters an entire Duke relief team held its own with the invaders.

Blue Devils Get Fast Start.

In quick order in the first stanza, the Blue Devils scored two touchdowns, one of them on a pass, and it appeared the contest might be turned into a one-sided affair, but Duke shot in its reserves.

The Devils turned to North Carolina's own speciality, forward passing, very successfully at intervals and the wide-wake Dukesters made passing dangerous for the heels by intercepting eight heaves. One interception, by Box Cox in the last quarter, was turned into a Duke touchdown.

There was no doubt after the first quarter but what the Devils would keep their unbeaten record clean. The Heels were helpless against the hard-charging, fierce-tackling and wide-awake Duke starting team and could do no better than hold their own with the reserves.

Horse Hendrickson led the way with the first two scores. One counter was made when he circled wide off his right wing for 11 yards and the other came on a pass from Rossiter, which netted a gain of 31 yards. The third Duke tally came in the last quarter after several threats had been stemmed. Cox intercepted a pass and ran 34 yards to score. Corky Cornelius added the three extra points after touchdowns from placement.

Boston College Victor Over West. Md.

Freitas Hero for Winners in Thrilling 12-to-9 Football Battle.

BOSTON, Nov. 18 (AP).—A powerful Boston College eleven downed a stubborn Western Maryland invader by a 12-to-9 score today. The game was packed with thrills, as the lead changed three times during the contest.

Boston can thank the kicking of John Freitas, star quarter back, for its victory, as he put Western Maryland in a hole from which the first Eagle touchdown resulted, and in the last half of the game he kept the Terrors in their own territory.

Freitas put one of his kicks outside at the visitors' 3-yard line early in the first period, and then took the kick-out on the 32-yard line and returned it to the 19. He passed to Tozi on the 5-yard line, and Driscoll carried over for the score.

Terrors Come to Life.

After this touchdown, Western Maryland came to life with a bang. Dunn intercepted a Boston pass at the Boston 40 and started an offensive drive which resulted in a touchdown. Shepherd and Dunn alternated in carrying to the 14-yard line. A lateral, Shepherd to McNally, carried to the 4-yard line.

Boston held for three downs, but Shepherd dashed around his own right end to score standing up. He then kicked the point after, which gave Western Maryland the lead.

At the start of the second half, Boston, after recovering a fumble on their own 30, carried 70 yards in seven plays. Freitas finally dived through for a score.

Tech High Wins Contest at Roanoke

Jefferson Bows, 12 to 0; 59-Yard Drive Nets Second Marker.

ROANOKE, Va., Nov. 18 (Spl.). The McKinley High School football team made a successful invasion of the Old Dominion today, turning back Jefferson High School here this afternoon, 12 to 0.

A blocked punt behind Roanoke's goal line early in the second quarter sent the Tech gridders out in front and the lead was only once seriously threatened. The Maroon and Gray turned Roanoke back from the 8-yard line in the third period and then clinched the victory with a 59-yard drive in the closing quarter.

McLean, substitute right end, blocked the ball as it sped from the toe of Tarpley, Roanoke punter, and Daly pounced on the oval behind the line for the first touchdown. Alley's try for the extra point from placement failed.

The chance for the opening score came when one of Wahl's punts was laid down on the Jefferson High 7-yard line.

The touchdown drive in the final period started after Tech received a punt on its own 41-yard line.

Coach Jim Pixlee Praised At G. W. Alumni Luncheon

TRIBUTE to James E. Pixlee, George Washington University football coach, was paid yesterday at an alumni luncheon at the Mayflower. Dr. Cloyd Heck Marvin, president, told the alumni and guests that if he had his choice of a leader of boys he would not change the decision made four years ago when Pixlee came to the university.

Pixlee in turn paid tribute to the courage, generosity and sincerity of his players and the attitude of the student body. He declared that the demonstration at the George Washington-Washington and Jefferson game was "one of the few times in my 20 years of coaching that I have ever seen the spirit of the stands actually reach out onto the field."

Discussing the development of the university, Dr. Marvin told of its unusual opportunities for educational leadership, in part through its strategic location in the Capital. He also declared that the university must train men and women able to adapt themselves to the needs of the present day.

Dr. Daniel L. Borden, president of the General Alumni Association, presided and introduced the guests, including Mrs. Joshua Evans, jr., Harry C. Davis, Mrs. Borden and Mrs. Pixlee, Gilbert Hall, Dean William C. VanVleck of the law school, Dean Earl Baldwin McKinley of the medical school, Dean William C. Ruediger of the school of education, and Mrs. Ruediger, and Edward K. Morris, baseball coach

Shepherd Beats Gallaudet, 26 to 6

Maddex Brothers Heroes; Blues, Aided by Pass, Make Touchdown.

TWO brothers, Hunter and Lucien Maddex, ripped Gallaudet's woefully weak line to shreds with smashing plunges and a deadly aerial attack yesterday on the Kendall Green gridiron, leading Shepherd College of Shepherdstown, W. Va., to a comparatively easy 26-6 victory over their silent football rivals.

Hunter, the quarter back, furnished the scoring blast with three touchdowns and two extra points, while his brother, a full back, contributed the fourth touchdown. Doing virtually all of the ball carrying, and alternating in passing to one another throughout the game, the Maddex brothers put on a football act that Gallaudet will long remember.

Shepherd Cuts Loose.

Held scoreless in the first quarter, Shepherd cut loose at the start of the second session, H. Maddex slashing off tackle 19 yards behind good interference to count the initial touchdown. Midway of the third quarter, Gallaudet was encamped on Shepherd's 30-yard line, thanks to two penalties. Here Clyde Hoffmeister, the Gallaudet star full back, attempted a pass to Left End Baughman, but the alert L. Maddex raced at top speed, grabbed the ball out of the ozone, and sped straight down the left side line 80 yards for a touchdown, leaving in his wake a mass of disappointed would-be tacklers.

Teddy Hughes, little Gallaudet coach, sat disconsolately on the bench, nervously folding his hands. Hughes wanted a touchdown, so he dispatched two subs, Conley Akin and Merle Goddin, to the firing line. Goddin, an end, caught one of Hoffmeister's passes and reeled off a 42-yard gain, placing the oval on the 13-yard line. However, Gallaudet lost the ball on downs.

Undaunted, Gallaudet fought back shortly after the fourth quarter got under way. Benefiting by a poor Shepherd punt that ended on the visitors' 30-yard line, Gallaudet started its drive for a touchdown. Long and Hoffmeister gained some 20 yards in three plays, and a 15-yard penalty gave the Blues the ball on the 1-yard line. Here Akin knifed through center for the touchdown as Gallaudet rooters went wild.

Shepherd opened another attack, H. Maddex returning Hoffmeister's kick-off 55 yards. The two brothers alternated in lugging the ball before H. Maddex went over on a driving play through center. Five minutes later L. Maddex shot a shovel pass to H. Maddex, good for 36 yards. Then followed a series of bewildering Warner laterals. H. Maddex put a high polish to the scoring festivities by catching his brother's pass over the goal line.

Defeat of Purdue Scrambles Race

Chicago, Nov. 18 (AP).—The defeat of Purdue by Iowa today scrambled the Big Ten football situation and left Michigan in first place.

The Wolverines led with a record of four victories, no defeats and one tie, whereas Minnesota, undefeated, has been tied four times and was in second place.

Illinois and Ohio State will meet next week with a chance to win or share in the title in event Northwestern should defeat Michigan and Wisconsin should upset Minnesota Saturday.

Virginia Holds V. P. I. Team To 6-6 Tie

40-Yard Pass Scores for Cavaliers Near End of First Half.

SCOTT STADIUM, Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 18 (Spl.).—In a grueling contest marked by superb defensive work on the part of both teams, Virginia and Virginia Polytechnic Institute fought to a 6-to-6 tie this afternoon in the final home game for the Cavaliers.

For the fourth time this season, Virginia was out in front at half time. The Cavaliers failed to register a single first down during the first half, but in the final minute just before the intermission, Johnson dropped back and hurled a 40-yard pass to Fryberger, who reached up and grabbed the ball on the 4-yard mark and crossed the goal line, with two Tech players on his heels.

Johnson's try for placement struck the cross-bar and bounded back on to the field.

There were frequent exchanges of punts after the start of the final period. With five minutes left to play, the injured Casey was called into action. At the very start he returned one of Johnson's long punts 35 yards. Two first downs followed, but Virginia took the ball on her 25-yard line. Again Johnson punted, and here the Gobblers launched a drive which could not be denied.

Ottoway, a substitute, reeled off 10 yards, and on the next play Morgan shot a pass to Smith, who was downed on Virginia's 15-yard line. Casey and Smith contributed a first down, and Ottoway dashed through tackle to knot the count. "Red" Negri's try for placement went wide of the uprights, and Virginians in the crowd of 6,000 heaved a sigh of relief.

96-Yard Kick-Off Run As Stanford Wins, 33-7

Stanford Stadium, Palo Alto, Calif., Nov. 18 (AP).—Stanford's Cardinals crushed Montana's Grizzlies, 33-7, today in a Pacific Coast Conference game.

Stansberry, of Norfolk, Nebr., Montana left half back, provided the greatest thrill, however, when he returned a kick-off 96 yards for a touchdown in the first period.

Feathers Star As Vols Rout Vanderbilt

Tennessee's 33-6 Victory Worst Over Rival in 30 Games Played.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 18 (AP).—Twisting and plunging, Beattie Feathers, Tennessee's part Indian half back, led his teammates to a crushing 33-to-6 victory over the Vanderbilt Commodores today as some 25,000 fans watched. It was the worst defeat handed a Vanderbilt eleven by the Vols in the 30 games played by the two teams since 1892. It also was the Commodores' first Southeastern Conference loss this year, although they had been twice tied. Tennessee already had a conference defeat by Alabama.

Feathers, who saw a long touchdown run called back in last year's game against Vanderbilt—one that would have broken a 0-to-0 tie—ran wild today against the Commodores, ramming his way through for three touchdowns.

Vandy Scores in First.

Vanderbilt scored its only touchdown in the first period after Brown, a guard, had recovered Vaughn's fumble on Tennessee's 9-yard line. A pass, Dixon to Carloss, scored.

Tennessee's other two touchdowns came in the second and third periods, the last on a thrilling 79-yard run by Vaughn, who had intercepted Dixon's pass.

Missouri Is Defeated By Washington, 33-7

St. Louis, Nov. 18 (AP).—The Washington University Bears today gladdened the hearts of 8,160 homecoming fans by soundly trouncing the University of Missouri Tigers, their traditional football rivals, 33 to 7.

It was the most decisive Washington victory over Missouri, current cellar occupant of the Big Six Conference, since the first game of their series in 1890, when Washington won, 28 to 0.

Washington scored in every period.

back field, and Katalinas in the line, played great defensive football for the Hilltoppers. Viskovich and Saverine were the only backs who appeared to be on their toes. The others did a poor job of backing up the line and left themselves wide open for passes, allowing eligible receivers to get behind them.

It was following an exchange of kicks in the final period that Bill Spisak pegged the leather to Spencer for a 51-yard gain that brought the action down to G. U.'s 7-yard line. Georgetown's forwards stopped Tech's running plays cold, but when the ground attack faltered, Carrol Spisak dropped back and heaved one to Carlton as he jogged over the goal line.

Kennedy Makes Run.

Paul Kennedy turned in a fancy piece of broken field running near the end of the game, picking up a punt on his 2-yard mark and zigzagging back to the 19-yard line before thrown. Georgetown was in possession of the ball when the game ended on its own 10-yard line. The final whistle was the scene for the most exciting play of the day, a hidden ball trick, executed by some brave spectator with the aid of several hundred cohorts. The run ended in No. 2 Police Station, the Bluecoats throwing three runners for a $10 loss.

Georgetown, Twin Oaks Girls Win Court Games

Georgetown and Twin Oaks playgrounds continued their triumphant marches through the ranks of the girls' basket ball league yesterday, winning over Rosedale and Montrose, respectively.

Rosedale fought down to the last few seconds of play in a vain effort to overtake Georgetown, which managed to eke out an 18-15 decision in a bitterly and brilliantly contested game. Irma Ludwig tossed the winning basket for Georgetown, one of the half-dozen she registered all afternoon.

Twin Oaks rallied in the final quarter to coast in with a 27-13 triumph over Montrose. Virginia Hunter's guarding and the accurate goal-tossing of Alice Satori clinched the honors for Twin Oaks.

Victor Earns $300 Prize Money

Takes Lead in Eleventh; Withstands Assault of 48 Others.

Wins by 78 Pins Over Manley; Annapolis Bowler Third.

ASTOR CLARKE, eighth ranking bowler in the United States, last night took the lead in the eleventh game and withstood the competition of 48 contestants to win the third annual 15-game Dixie Sweepstakes with a total pinfall of 2,003, the highest score ever rolled over the same route in the District of Columbia.

Clarke was the winner by 78 pins over Brad Manley and earned $300 by his victory with Manley's 1,925 total netting him $150 as second money. Third prize of $100 went to Arnold, of Annapolis, with a 1,907 total.

Other money winners were Doc Pickus, of Baltimore, fourth, and winning $60; Hanson, of Richmond, fifth, and winning $40, and Caldwell, sixth, and winning $25.

Share First Block Lead.

Temple Keen, of Baltimore, with a total of 677 shared with Jack White, of Connecticut, the lead at the end of the first block rolled at the Arcadia alleys. Reds Megaw, of Washington, was third with 671, when the bowlers moved to Convention Hall early in the evening for the second block.

Arnold emerged as the leader of the Convention Hall set, rolling 135 in his tenth game to top the field with a total of 1294, closely followed by Jack White with 1291 The others were bunched nearby with Manley boasting 1290, Clark 1285 and Miller 1271. Keen had dropped into a tie with Perce Wolfe for sixth place.

Beginning the final block, at the Recreation, Clarke launched his bid with a 167 game to go to the front, and finished up with a 718 set for the five games to set a new District record. He had games of 167, 139, 143, 159, and 110.

The highest game of the tournament was rolled by Reds Morgan, District league bowler, who tossed in a game of 191, a new record for this season in Washington, although ten pins less than the all-time record of 201.

Al Woods, although out of the running, bowled a 184 game in the last set, tossing four straight strikes.

punt of 80 yards when the situation changed dramatically.

Don Elser, another Notre Dame sophomore, punted dead to the Wildcat 13-yard line. Olson dropped back to kick, but Krause broke in and blocked it. As the ball rolled about, there was a wild scramble, but Tom Gorman, Notre Dame center, recovered on the Northwestern 13.

Pilney then swept into action. On his first thrust, he made 2 yards. He swept toward his left wing on the next try and then reversed his run with a hard-driving, twisting dash that didn't stop until he had crossed the Wildcat goal. Mazziotti place-kicked the extra point.

The game thereafter was all Noter Dame except for two Northwestern drives to the Rambler 37. The Ramblers threatened repeatedly in Northwestern territory but couldn't get any closer than the 10-yard mark; Northwestern's best stand came in the fourth when the Wildcats pushed the foe back 18 yards on three thrusts after Nick Lukats and Elser had swept down the field with one of the most powerful running and passing attacks ever witnessed at Dyche stadium.

Anderson Happy.

Coach Hunk Anderson glanced at the score board, which told the final score of the Iowa upset of Purdue and his old pal, Coach Noble Kizer, and then walked happily across the field, accepting congratulations and smiling for the first time since the season opened.

Oklahoma Felled By Kansas State

Russell Star, With Runs of 49 and 38 Yards.

Manhattan, Kans., Nov. 18 (AP).—Dougal Russell, a swivelhipped will o' the wisp from McDonald, Pa., faded like a phantom through the Oklahoma Sooners on two long touchdown dashes to give Kansas State College a 14-0 victory here today and the runner-up honor in the Big Six football race, the highest mark Bo McMillin's Purple crew ever achieved in the conference.

The ace 178-pound half back raced 49 yards for his first touchdown in the second period, and 38 yards for the other.

Oren Stoner place-kicked both extra points.

Hawaiian Senate O. K.'s Racing and Betting Bill

Honolulu, Nov. 18 (AP).—The Territorial Senate today passed a bill to legalize horse racing and parimutuel betting as one of the first legislative acts of a drive to "liberalize" territorial laws in the interest of tourist traffic.

The house has before it a bill to legalize cockfighting. Senator Lester Petrie, author of the racing bill, said recently he also would introduce legislation to permit gambling casinos.

There was only one Senate vote against the racing bill. It was cast by the lone woman member, Elsie Wilcox.

score in the first quarter. After an exchange of kicks, Widmyer again kicked to Beeler, who ran the ball back to his own 35. The Blue Jays bucked the line for a first down and a pass, Beeler to McClean, brought the ball to the Terps' 32-yard line. From there Beeler circled end for a first down on the 19-yard line and McClean passed to Pasarew, bringing the ball to the 8-yard line. A first down was awarded the Jays after a careful measurement was taken with everything but a pair of calipers. There was the scoring opportunity. Johns Hopkins had the ball on Maryland's 8-yard line, but it didn't go anywhere with it, and the ball went to the enemy on downs.

Pass Sets Stage.

In the second quarter, after a battle in midfield, the Old Liners paraded the ball to the opposition's 45, from where it was passed to B. Buscher, who was downed on the 23. After two short gains Widmyer carried around end to the 2½-yard line from which point it was plunged to within inches and finally carried over by Joe Crecca. Widmyer kicked the extra point from placement.

On the very next play after the kick-off Widmyer intercepted a pass from McClean intended for Beeler and galloped some 30 yards to the 10-yard line. Then, after the pigskin was pushed to the 1-yard line, Widmyer went over. He kicked the extra point.

The Blue Jays' big moment came in this period when McClean tossed a 33-yard pass from the 50-yard line to C. Kelly, who galloped across the goal line for the lone Hopkins touchdown. McClean kicked from placement for the extra tally.

Gets Two More.

The second half was more in the nature of a rout than a football game, with Maryland constantly in the shadow of the enemy's goal posts, and pushing the ball across twice. The midfield activity was signalized by some very spectacular ball juggling which made the game resemble a handball contest rather than a grid game.

Widmyer went over from the 2-yard line on a wide end run to score the Terps' touchdown in the third period. He kicked from placement for the extra point. Benner scored the last touchdown, but then failed in the only kick missed all day for extra points.

Good Schedule On Sandlots Today

Marion-Maryland Play at Griffith Stadium in Feature Clash.

SANDLOT football reaches its peak for the 1933 season today with a bevy of knock-'em-down and drag-'em-out attractions scheduled. Topping the list is the Marion-Maryland A. C. battle for the unlimited championship of the city, which will be staged at Griffith Stadium at 2:30 o'clock.

If you prefer a neighborhood feud, there is the Palace-Mercury grudge fight, listed for Gonzaga Field, at the same hour, for the "championship of the Southwest." Another game smacking of a natural is the Meridian-Brentwood Park engagement at Seat Pleasant. A trio of games in the 135-pound division of the National Capital League round out the program.

Fee Collier and "Bottle Cox," old teammates on the Mohawk eleven, when the Hawks were the pride of Southeast, will be rivals today. Collier, though not as spry as when he was an integral part of the Hawk back field, still remains the ablest field general in sandlot ranks and will direct the Maryland attack. Cox, who long ago retired to the bench, is coaching the Marions.

Two Good Punters.

Collier probably will do the kicking for Maryland, with Ray Hoff booting for the Marions. Both have done consistently well in league competition this season. The Marylanders have Bennie Jenkins and Gene Boyd for line-plunging purposes, and the Marions will rely on Rudy Hughes and Guy Roam, their ace ground gainers.

Earlier in the season the two elevens battled to a scoreless tie. Neither has met defeat, but both are keyed to a high pitch for the deciding game. The Marions won the crown last season, beating all comers, but are held an even choice in today's game.

Palace and Mercury are almost certain to stage another of their bruising and brilliant battles at Gonzaga. Joe Pirone again is at the helm of the 150-pound champs, after an absence of a month, and his old rival, "Check" Webster, is leading the rival hosts.

The complete schedule for the day is as follows:

Unlimited Division.

Marion A. C. vs. Maryland A. C., Griffith stadium, 2:30 p. m.

135-pound Division.

Centennials vs. Georgetown Boys Club, Monument Field No. 1, 1 p. m. Apache Preps vs. Cleveland A. C., Seat Pleasant, 12:30 p. m. Palace Preps vs. Mercury Juniors, Gonzaga Field, 12:30 p. m.

Nonleague Games.

Palace A. C. vs. Mercury A. C., Gonzaga Field, 2:30 p. m. Meridian A. C. vs. Brentwood Hawks, Seat Pleasant, 2:30 p. m.

Homan Kinsley Sets Two New Tank Marks

Homan Kinsley, of the Baltimore "Y," last night smashed two tank records at the Y. M. C. A. pool in the first open meet of the indoor season. An enthusiastic throng of more than 200 fans saw a field of 81 natators vie for honors.

Kinsley lowered his own record for the 50-yard free style with a new mark of 24.2 seconds, 1 3-5 seconds better than the existing record. He came back in the 220-yard free style to better the mark of Al Kieas, who also swam in the race and finished third, by 8 3-5 seconds. His time was 2:24 4-5.

The other record was credited to Don Hogan, of the Penn A. C., who swam the 100-yard back stroke in 1:08 2-5, clipping 1 2-5 seconds from Bill Marmion's best time, which constituted the existing record.

50-yard free style—Won by Homan Kinsley (Baltimore "Y"); second, W. Meckey (Penn A. C.); third, L. Oesterlin (Massanutten). Time, 24.2.

100-yard backstroke—Won by D. Hogan (Penn A. C.); second, C. Diehl (Massanutten); third, B. Marmion (Washington "Y"). Time, 1.08 2-5.

220-yard free style—Won by Homan Kinsley (Baltimore "Y"); second, T. Payne (Massanutten); third, A. Kieas (Baltimore "Y"). Time, 2.24 4-5.

Fancy diving—Won by Bob Knight; second, R. K. Moncure; third, John Broaddus (all unattached). Points, 97.6.

The Post's Weekly Bowling Round-up

National Capital League.

Triumphing over King Pin, an arch foe, Lucky Strike Barbers flared up in the National Capital League last week to gain a tie for second place with the Hokie Smith charges and become a menace to the front-running Silver Spring Skating Rink crew, the one club whose wings the entire loop are striving to clip.

This Espey-Krauss-Anderson-Walson-Pricci combination has few equals as a fighting duckpin outfit. Their all-for-one and one-for-all spirit, ever prevalent, puts many games in the win column. Joe Pricci's 394 set topped the 1,816 team count that swept King Pin.

Although crashing through with a team total of 1,938, the third highest set rolled on District drives this season, Book of Washington, was not equal to the task of hanging goose eggs up for Lucky Strike. The C. C. McDevitt entry shot 659, 604 and 670, dropping the middle skirmish by 12 sticks. Sam Simon, with 410, and Brad Mandley, with 409, threw in the heaviest wallops. Ben Hare's 383 led the Luckies.

A rousing third-game finish gave Fountain Hams two tilts from Peoples Life Insurance.

District League.

Paul Harrison today tops the District league with a phenomenal average of 130-2 for 24 games. Not in the history of this premier circuit do the record books reveal such an astounding feat after eight weeks of rolling.

The Arcadia captain, blue ribbon winner of countless bowling events, has reeled off sets of 396, 398, 382, 402, 371, 356, 409, and 408 to attain his sensational mark. His 178 is also a game record for the season.

Last season Harrison created no mild stir by averaging 127 for a period of 14 weeks in the Columbia Heights League.

Johnny Anderson, with 127 for 12 games; Ray Von Dreele, with 124; George Honey, with 123, and Dutch Newman, with 123, follow Harrison.

Occidental Restaurant, holding first place over King Pin on greater pinfall, has top team average, with 605. Ollie Pacini, No. 1 ranking star of the country, is the strike leader, with 26. Maxie Rosenberg has made the most spares, with 94. Joe Harrison, Paul's brother, is giving the bambinos something to shoot at, with a set of 448.

Not to be crowded out of the limelight entirely by his more illustrious brothers, little Ouncie Harrison is holding his head high, with an average of 121 and a fraction.

Groups Seek U. S. Withdrawal If '36 Olympic Games Are Held in Germany

Wheltle Head Of One Unit In Move

Aims to Have Delegates to District Session Vote New Site.

A.A.U. Would Dominate Meeting if Plans Are Realized.

By a Staff Correspondent.

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 18.—The United States will withdraw from the 1936 Olympics unless the games are removed from Germany, if several strong factions succeed in having A. A. U. delegates to the American Olympic Association, meeting in Washington Wednesday, committed to disapproval of Berlin as a site.

Albert F. Wheltle, of this city, president of the South Atlantic A. A. U., is heading one group which is in favor of a concerted stand against Germany as the scene of the contests. If he is successful in swinging into line with the element which feels the same way in the Intercollegiate Athletic Association, the two groups may be able to have the A. A. U. national meeting in Pittsburgh, starting Monday, instruct all delegates to the American Olympic Association meeting, which the A. A. U. would then dominate, to vote in favor of removal of the games to another country.

Clear-Cut Majority.

The American Athletic Union, as an organization, controls 90 and the Intercollegiate 80 of the 429 votes to be cast at the Olympic Association meeting. Through representatives from various affiliated organizations, the two parent bodies control an additional 123 ballots, giving them a clear-cut majority and control if they take concerted action.

Wheltle has canvassed by letter practically all A. A. U. organizations in the United States and reports an almost unanimous sentiment against holding the games in Berlin. A resolution has been prepared on the subject to be presented at the National A. A. U. meeting and it is understood that either Wheltle or leaders of another group will bring the matter up for discussion and settlement.

Wheltle claims that Brig. Gen. Sherrill's forceful stand against the Olympics being held in Germany, voiced during the meeting of the International Olympic meeting at Geneva, was "soft-soaped" by Nazi assertions that no one would be barred because of race or color which, he claims, would not be a fact. It is his contention that Jewish athletes will be barred from participation by being prohibited from joining the various athletic organizations that will represent Germany in the games.

Sees Serious Danger.

Wheltle, who is a Catholic of German descent, is opposed to American-Jewish athletes being asked to compete in any country frankly hostile to their race.

"At the very least, Jewish athletes representing this country would be made very uncomfortable in Germany," he said today, "and they would very likely be in serious danger of bodily harm. The best they could get out of it would be an uncomfortable sojourn in a foreign country where they would require police protection at all times."

Avery Brundage, president and chairman of the foreign relations committee of the A. A. U., has stated to Wheltle that he is in receipt of numerous letters on the situation in Germany and that, so far as he knows, "opinion on the matter is nearly unanimous. The only question is when and how to act."

Redmond in Exhibition At Manor Club Today

Having completed his trick-shot exhibition at Columbia Country Club, Jack Redmond will move over to Manor this afternoon to unravel his reportoire of fancy shots. Previous to his exhibition, Redmond will team with Al Treder, Manor pro, against Harry Pitt and Dave Thomson, former and present club champions, respectively, at 1:30 p. m.

Redmond yesterday teamed with Fred McLeod at Columbia against Al Houghton, Kenwood pro, and Bob Barnett, of Chevy Chase. After 12 holes the match was all even, and Redmond was forced to abandon playing in order to demonstrate his trick shots on the first tee.

Pro Incorporates Self for Golf Tour

St. Louis, Nov. 18 (AP).—The departure today for the winter "golfing wars" of Bill Schwartz, St. Louis professional, is of prime interest to 125 of his friends.

For the friends have exactly $950 invested in the professional, who sold "shares" in himself to finance a trip to tournaments in California, Mexico, Arizona, Texas, South Carolina and Georgia.

Schwartz agreed to refund to his shareholders the first $950 in prize money he may win. Al over that amount will be split evenly between the golfer and the investors.

Stoddard Makes Ace.

Clark W. Stoddard, runner-up for the Manor Club Golf Championship this season, scored his first ace last week on the 145-yard eleventh hole of his home course.

Stoddard used a mashie. He was playing with O. L. Waite and Ed Kilby.

Playing against the Yankees at Griffith Stadium in 1924, Washington had three men on base in the ninth with the score tied. On one pretext or another, Manager Bucky Harris delayed the game until Walter Johnson, who was in the locker room, could change from his civilian clothes to his uniform. Johnson was called in to pinch hit just as the umpire in chief was ready to command Harris to put in a batter or forfeit. Johnson stepped to the plate, made a hit and drove in the winning run.

In the Thanksgiving Day game with George Washington in 1927 at Brookland Stadium, Ray Foley, Catholic U. star quarter back, threw a long pass just over the goal line. Babe Clapper, of the G. W. secondary defense, attempted to batter it down. He hit the ball with his closed fist and it bounded high into the air. Foley rushed in, caught the ball 15 yards from the goal and carried his own forward pass across the goal line for a touchdown in one of football's freakiest plays.

In the Glenmore purse at Pimlico on November 4, 1925, High Star, a 2-year-old that had never won a race, was standing sidewise when the barrier was sprung and was left at the post. Traliing the field by at least 20 lengths as the horses rounded the first turn, High Star appeared to be hopelessly out of it. Down the stretch like a bullet came the 2-year-old to overtake his rivals and win by a nose over Black Bart, a 40-to-1 shot. High Star paid $307.90 in the $2 mutuels.

"Josh" Licarione and "Reds" Schofield, perennial stars of the Washington sandlots with the old Mohawks and Navy Yard teams, made their debuts on college gridirons in 1921 at the ages of 30 and 26, respectively, entering George Washington University when the eligibility codes were not as strict. Licarione was a plunging full back and Schofield a quarter back renowned for his ability to catch punts. After a brief career with G. W., both Licarione and Schofield went back to the local sandlots.

Speaking of Tennis . . .

By Bill Shreve.

TWO suggestions have been recently made toward changing the rules of Davis Cup competition. Both have merit and warrant serious consideration, but it is doubtful if heed will be given to them for some time at least.

The first of these new ideas would limit the number of years that a player could represent his country in Davis Cup matches to three or four. This suggestion is similar to that made by the golf professionals recently in saying that the number of years of participating on their Ryder Cup teams should be limited.

The second of these brain children of the fireside is that the challenge round should be done away with and that the defending nation should be required to play through the same as the challengers.

This suggestion will likely meet with more approval than the first. In fact it was rumored that if the United States again won the Davis Cup, it would have argued strongly for the change.

Arguments on Both Sides.

There are many arguments both for and against limiting the number of years of a player's participation in Davis Cup matches. But even the opponents of the suggestion can not help but agree that it would make the sport more amateur than it is under its present regulations.

Those who would leave the rules as they now are claim that it is unfair to deprive a player from representing his country in Davis Cup competition after playing on the team three years. In many cases the man may just be reaching his peak at that time.

Supporters of the suggestion, who have in mind making the sport more of an amateur one than it now is, point out that a man playing on the Davis Cup team for seven or eight years, and devoting the necessary amount of time required to keep his game up to its peak hardly can be classed as an amateur.

Tradition Sole Opponent.

Tradition, so frequently confused with hinderance to progress, will be the only opponent to the doing away with the challenge round within the next year or two. Even the defending nations have found at last that it acts as a boomerang and should be abolished.

It usually is an aid in lengthening the number of consecutive years that a nation retains the Davis Cup, as is shown by the fact that only two countries were possessors of the trophy from 1920 through 1932, a total of 13 years. The United States won during the first 7 years of this period, with France winning the cup the last 6 years of the 13.

But the trophy once lost is not so easily regained. And this can be blamed mostly to the challenge round, which keeps the defending nation out of the early round competition. These early round matches very profitably could be used in training new material to supplant aging members of the team. But the rules being what they are, the defending nation plays but one match—the final against the strongest opponent possible. Only tried and true veterans get the call for this match and no young and promising players are developed until after the cup has been lost.

Status Unaffected.

There was some talk last week that the amateur status of top ranking players would be hit if they accepted racquets free of charge as laid down under the NRA code of the tennis racket manufacturers.

Top ranking players have been accepting racquets free of charge for years, though there has never before been an attempt to limit this priviledge to a certain group defined in a written agreement, or a written acknowledgement that racquets were given to leading players.

In fact, the United States Lawn Tennis Association has a recommendation in its rules that requests manufacturers and dealers to discontinue making gifts of tennis rackets to players and that players cooperate by refusing such gifts if they are made. This resolution was adopted at their annual meeting February 2, 1924. It appears as though the N. R. A., the U. S. L. T. A., and the T. R. M. A. (tennis racket manufacturers association) will have to get together on their rules and regulations.

Dropshots.

Tennis balls for the coming year are to be of a slightly higher compression . . . the colors and general appearance of several of the favorite rackets have undergone a complete change . . . Tilden's new schedule for indoor exhibition matches during the winter does not include either Washington or Baltimore . . .the tennis bowlers are at it again this year, having three teams in the Decatur Heights Duckpin League . . . Muscoe Garnett, Neil Anderson, Pat Deck, Johnny Neale, Larry Phillips, Del Lowe and Nelson Spottswood are keeping their forehand drives in shape by spilling the pins.

Mrs. Tschiffely Heads Golf Committee Again

Mrs. Douglas Tschiffely was reelected chairman of the women's golf committee of the Washington Golf and Country Club at its annual meeting. Mrs. L. Brubaker was named secretary; Mrs. G. C. Roney, treasurer; Mrs. O. Thacker, chairman of the tournament committee; Mrs. C. B. Stewart, handicap chairman, and Mrs. J. L. Fieser and Mrs. C. H. Merrillat, team captains.

The executive committee will be composed of Mrs. Tschiffely, Mrs. Merrillat, Mrs. Fieser, Mrs. Stewart, Mrs. Thacker, Mrs. Roney, Mrs. R. N. Sutton, Mrs. Byron Price and Mrs. L. Brubaker.

Assisting Mrs. Thacker on the tournament committee will be Mrs. J. E. McCabe, Mrs. William S. Masten, Mrs. H. B. Willey and Mrs. A. B. Moore.

Princeton's Last Period Drives Defeat Fighting Middies, 13-0

strength and teamwork, had plainly dominated the first half. This showing certainly had surprised the customers, who numbered about 40,000 when the last of them arrived, late, and it probably surprised the Princetons, too. They had mauled Columbia a few weeks ago and only last week Columbia had roughed up the Navy in a game which lost the semblance of a contest at times and became a demonstration of superiority. They had no legal right to anticipate such obstreperous conduct as the Midshipmen showed them in the hard, shocking collisions preceding the tea interval. But they were confronted with a puzzling fact when they hauled themselves off to their conference at half-time. The Navy was outplaying them, especially along the line, and was making a particular spectacle of their garish Garry Levan, the sophomore whose billing in the papers had pictured him as another Red Grange, at least. Garry Levan had stepped off one gain of 9 yards at the start of the game, but Princeton was caught holding on the play, so the profit was wiped away. Later he had done a 16-yard stretch around the Navy's right end which only led to another punt and no worth-while result.

Navy Line-up Shifted.

A Navy plucking board had made certain changes in personnel. Bolton Rankin, a yearling or sophomore, of Paris, Tex., was playing at left half, a post ordinarily held by Walter Baumberger or the Hawaiian, Gordon Chung-Hoon, and was making himself a great bother to the boys who call themselves the Tigers. Leslie Slack, of Grand Rapids, was at quarter back, in place of Lawrence Becht, who was soon disabled. There were new parties holding down the Navy jobs at right end and right tackle, Bob Dornin and Slade Cutter, respectively. The rearrangement seemed to add much life and determination to the Midshipmen's team.

Bill Clark was kicking the ball for the Navy and Hugh MacMillian, another of the Princeton sophomores, was kicking the football back at him but losing ground a little at a time in the exchange. Some of Clark's kicks were traveling more than 60 yards and MacMillian, often punting from points deep in his own territory, and subject to worrisome molestation from the Navy forwards, was doing almost as well.

Slack Given the Sack.

Young Slack, at quarter back for the Navy, was yanked out conspiciously in the second period when, with Princeton arranging to punt on fourth down, he loittered around behind his own line, slapping histackles on the pants, exhorting and hollering meaningless pepper-talk until MacMillian kicked one way over his head and set the Navy back to their 17-yard line. He snapped out of the scene as though some one had rubbed him out and Bill Wilcox went in to give a personal show in the art of catching punts of which he accepted many and fumbled none.

Although the Navy was deeper into Princeton territory than the Princetons advanced into theirs in the first half, there was no difference between the teams on which anyone could have paid off a wager. The score was tied and, for the purposes of the record, the honors were even.

We will just skip the third quarter in which nothing continued to happen at a spirited rate and advance to the moment in the final period when events began to take place. They were punting back and forth, of course, and Princeton received the ball on their 46-yard line. Bill Clark, for the Navy, intercepted a pass from Kablic and Kablic promptly did as much for Bill Clark, being downed at the Navy's 47-yard line. So now Clark, not to be outdone, intercepted one from Rulon-Miller and this sort of thing began to get a little ridiculous.

Clark was downed at his own 45-yard line. On his next play he tossed a pass to an ineligible catcher and it was Princeton's ball still 45 yards from Navy's goal. But at last a pass went square and Levan caught the ball and was downed only 6 yards from the goal on a throw from Rulon-Miller. On the fourth down Spofford plowed over the Navy's left side 4 yards to score in a great tumble.

Princeton kicked off and the ball went into action on Navy's 20-yard line. Levan intercepted a pass from Clark, being downed at Navy's 38-yard line. A long pass from Kadlic to Levan made a first down at the 12-yard line and Spofford raced around the Navy's right end to score again as soon as that.

The Navy was weakening now and sending in skinny-looking kids to relieve the winded big boys. Princeton was sending in varsity reserves who were interchangeable with the most regular of the varsity regulars.

The football game was just one-quarter too long for the Navy's strength and resistance. They were outnumbered, outmuscled and outweighed, but nobody who saw them beat the Tigers to the shock throughout the first half and rip their line apart will wish to say that they were outfought at any time.

U. S. Amateur May Add 32 Qualifiers

Move to Increase Match Play Eligibles to 64 in Future Tourneys.

NEW YORK, Nov. 18 (AP).—A proposal that the number of qualifiers for the National Amateur golf championship be increased from 32 to 64 probably will come up for discussion when the executive committee of the United States Golf Association meets here November 23, it became known tonight.

No definite action has yet been taken, but it is known the plan has been informally discussed by responsible officials. Under the present system, the National Amateur field usually is restricted to 150, the majority of whom are required to qualify in the sectional qualifying round.

The first two days of the championship proper then are given over to two 18-hole rounds, the low 32 qualifying for match play.

Under the system now proposed, the low 64 would qualify for match play with the survivors facing four 18-hole match play rounds before reaching the 36-hole semifinals. Proponents of the change believe the tournament loses much of its popular appeal under the present system, by which the qualifiers play only two 18-hole rounds of match competition.

Women Golfers Compete at Kenwood

OFFICERS of the Women's District of Columbia Golf Association, members of the executive committee, and other committee members, will assemble Wednesday morning at the Kenwood course to compete in a tournament for the President's Plate.

The President's Plate competition was inaugurated last season by the then retiring president, Mrs. Frank R. Keefer, who donated a silver plate. Played at Chevy Chase, the tournament was won by Mrs. J. W. Beller, of Columbia, who shot a 90-7—83.

27 Will Compete.

A field of 27 women golfers is eligible to participate, and participants may select their own partners. Play will begin at 10 a. m.

According to the original plan of the President's Plate, the next retiring president of the association will be asked to donate the runner-up prize.

Among the women who will compete are Mrs. Elizabeth C. Harris, president; Miss Sue Gantt, Mrs. E. A. Rule, and Mrs. R. C. Miller, of Kenwood; Mrs. Norman D. Frost, Mrs. H. R. Quinter, Mrs. J. R. DeFarges and Mrs. J. W. Beller, of Columbia; Mrs. Betty Palmer Meckley, Mrs. J. F. Gross, and Mrs. Don Scott, of Indian Spring; Mrs. R. N. Sutton, Mrs. Douglas Tschiffely, of Washington; Mrs. W. F. Holtzman, Mrs. A. E. Dedicke, Mrs. Charles K. Wing, of Army and Navy; Mrs. Alma Von Steinner, unattached; Mrs. Theodore Peyser, of Woodmont; Mrs. Howard Simons, Mrs. L. G. Pray, of Manor; Mrs. J. F. Dowdall, Mrs. H. A. Knox, of Congressional; Mrs. Frank R. Keefer, Mrs. Y. E. Booker, and Mrs. Harrison Brand, jr., of Chevy Chase; Mrs. H. Burton Shipley and Mrs. R. Carl Mitchell, Beaver Dam.

Turkey Golf Tourney For Women Nov. 27

William Morrison Smith, of Columbia Country Club, is donating the prizes for the women's invitation turkey golf tournament at Manor on Monday, November 27. The tournament will be 18 holes medal play with handicaps.

There will be prizes in two classes. "A" class will find players with 1 to 16 handicaps competing, while those with 17 to 27 handicaps will battle in "B" class. Contestants will make up their own foursomes with starting times. Play will start at 9:30 a. m. Among those who already have entered are Mrs. H. R. Quinter, Columbia; Mrs. Frank R. Keefer, Chevy Chase; Mrs. Douglas Tschiffely, Washington; Mrs. Roy Miller, Kenwood, and Mrs. Mack Myers, Manor.

Altrock Advances To Golf Semifinals

Beats Kupka in Rock Creek Turkey Tournament.

Nick Altrock, popular baseball comedian-coach, forged into the semifinals of the annual turkey golf tournament at Rock Creek's course yesterday by defeating Gus Kupka, former Cleveland amateur star, by 2 and 1.

Altrock played rock-steady golf, shooting a 74 to close out his opponent on the seventeenth green. He will play the winner of the match between B. Harry Graham, Rock Creek manager, and D. J. Grant.

Graham won his first-round battle yesterday at the expense of G. Rogers, 2 and 1.

Only one first-round match remains to be played today. That will be between M. Polinger and George Sullivan. The winner of this match will meet Arthur Darling. John Connelly, heavy favorite, and Joe Micker, conqueror of Pat Axtell, medalist, will clash in their second round match tomorrow at 1:30 p. m.

In the second flight, W. H. Bray eliminated 74-year-old U. David Seltzer, 5 and 4, while F. Ficco trimmed Bob Leapley, 2 and 1. In the fourth flight, George Clark reached the semifinals, defeating E. M. Smith, 4 and 3.

First round matches in all flights must be completed today.

Changes Due for Method of Conducting National Amateur, District and Middle Atlantic P. G. A. Events; Burtons Prove Able Pros.

By Dave Herman.

CHANGES in the systems of conducting the National Amateur golf championship, the District championship, and the Middle Atlantic P. G. A. are expected to come about next year.

The U. S. G. A. has several plans under consideration calculated to help the stars who have been denied admittance to the select match play circle, due to the pressure of medal play in the National Amateur. Indications are that the method of staging the sectional qualification rounds also might undergo some revision.

For several years golfers throughout the country have voiced serious objections to the manner in which the amateur blue-ribbon classic has been run off. Fuel was added to the flame of discussion at this season's championship at Kenwood, near Cincinnati, where six national stars, including three former champions, were forced to play off with six others for eight qualifying places.

All of these were tied with scores of 150. Chick Evans, H. Chandler Egan and Max Marston were in the playoff with George Dunlap, Maurice McCarthy and Eddie Held. All survived, and Dunlap and Marston gave the dope bucket a sereve jolting by going to the finals, the former triumphing.

Sweetser Missed Out.

It was by a one shot that Jess Sweetser, another former titleholder, missed qualifying. The Boston fusileer, Jess Guilford, another one-time holder of the crown, was two shots out of the charmed circle. The medal play pressure was too much for George Voigt, and, he too finished with two dismal rounds.

One of the biggest disappointments of the season was the failure of Francis Ouimet, twice former champion, to land a place in the sectional qualifying event in Boston.

Grantland Rice, in this month's American Golfer, suggests that the championship be run off strictly on a match play basis, his plan being to qualify 200 in the sectional tests, "turn the field loose at the old man-to-man game—and not the battle for strokes."

Naturally, by having only match play in the championship proper, the U. S. G. A. would be copying the British method, which after all is a pretty good way of running a tournament. During the past few years there have been few English participants in our American events. due to the fact that the Britons are opposed to the 36-hole medal rounds. Should the U S. G. A. decide to make next year's amateur a match play battle, it would not only please hundreds of American golfers, but also please the British stars, who unquestionably would turn out in larger force than heretofore.

Should Increase List.

However, should the golfing fathers turn deaf ears to the all match play method, they should at least increase the match play qualifiers from 32 to 64. All of which would give the national stars who ordinarily finish a shot or two out of the qualifying circle a chance to make the grade.

With respect to our own District championship, which proved nothing short of a dismal flop last September, there is every reason to believe that the local association will make some change in the tournament. The boys apparently do not relish the thought of playing 72 holes medal play split over a two-day period, and probably would welcome an 18 medal round with two days of match play.

Only a dozen golfers, only four of whom might be termed stars, participated in the last District championshop at Indian Spring, which Dick Lunn won by a one-stroke margin after a play-off with Roger Peacock.

In the case of the Middle Atlantic P. G. A., there has been talk of abolishing the 18-hole medal play, and three days of match play, and converting the tournament into a 54-hole or 72-hole event.

Lost First Test.

The past Middle Atlantic P. G. A. at Chevy Chase taught some of the favored pros a lesson. A golfer such as Al Houghton, who is a spectacular medal player, lost by 1 up in his opening match to a man he could have beaten out in a medal play test. Such is true of Gene Larkin and Bob Barnett, who lost their first round matches. Here are two golfers who are good medal players, and probably would have placed in the money in a two or three-day medal battle.

If a prize were to be awarded the golfer making the best shot of the 1933 season, Joe Kirkwood, the renowned Thurston of the links, certainly would deserve chief consideration.

While the writer did not have the pleasure of seeing Professor Kirkwood execute this masterful shot, he heard enough decsriptions of it and talk around the locker rooms of Kenwood to convince him that it was a remarkable performance by a truly remarkable golfer.

My good friend, Ed Teague, of the Manor Club, an interested spectator at the two-day National Capital Open—and a gentleman who doesn't play such a bad game of golf, himself—was an eye-witness to Kirkwood's famous shot, and has this to say about it:

"Kirkwood was playing the second hole, 483 yards, a par 4, Sunday afternoon. He hooked his tee shot behind two trees on the left in deep rough. His ball lay about two feet from the base of the trees. It was impossible to make a full swing, as he was too close to the tree trunks. About 50 of the gallery watched how he was going to play his shot to the green, some 175 yards away.

Took Sideway Swing.

"Horton Smith told him to chip out into the fairway, but Joe took a sideway swing at the ball, and it sailed up in between the two trees (about 8 inches apart) and came to rest about six yards short of the green. It was indeed the best shot I have ever seen played, and I heard Horton Smith remark to Kirkwood that 'there isn't another pro in the game that could have pulled off that shot.'"

Incidentally, Kirkwood managed to get a 5, although he might easily have taken a 6. That great shot enabled him to finish with a 71—and in the money.

Yes, we agree no one but a Kirkwood could have played that difficult shot.

Of course, as famous as Kirkwood is for playing hazardous shots, he was taking a chance. There leaps to mind the case of Al Watrous, who hooked his ball deep into woods on the sixteenth hole of the final 18-hole round at Kenwood. Watrous boldly attempted to play to the green, but the ball struck a tree, stopping a few yards away in heavy grass. Undaunted, Watrous played a grand third shot, missed his par 4.

Had Watrous played out safely, he might have scored his par. That one mistake cost him $100, as I figure it.

Brothers on Hand.

A tournament nowadays is not complete unless several sets of brothers are on hand to compete.

Last week during the National Capital Open there were nine sets of brothers participating—and two brothers, Mike and Joe Turnesa, finished in the money. Another brother, Phil, also was present. The Turnesas hail from Elmsford, N. Y. Still a fourth one, little Willie, is considered the up and coming star of the family. Metropolitan amateur champion, 18-year-old Willie did not compete at Kenwood in Washington, but he was one of the stars of the National Amateur at Kenwood in Cincinnati.

Here are the golfing brothers:

Len Gallett, Waukesha, Wis.; Francis, Milwaukee, and Jim, Hanover, Pa.

Tommy Armour, Chicago; Sandy, Washington.

Cyril and Bill Walker, Hackensack, N. J.

Cliff and Carroll Spencer, Washington, and Glenn, Baltimore.

Walter, Frank, Gillie Cunningham, Washington.

Mel and John Shorey, Washington.

Claggett and Eddie Stevens, Washington.

Billy and George Molloy, Washington.

Made a Wise Move.

When Army and Navy Country Club officials assigned Danny and Alan Burton to the professional post last spring they certainly made a wise move.

The youngsters have made good in a big way, and their work in the golf shop, in instructing the players and in conducting various events during the season, has evoked praise from both the men and women's golf chairmen.

When J. Munro Hunter, sr., left the club and the Burtons were appointed, few believed they would last more than a month. But these determined brothers put their heart and soul into the job, and their untiring efforts have been crowned with success.

Well known District golfers, such as Maj. R. K. Sutherland, Capt. Kendall J. Fielder, Maj. E. A. Noyes and Mrs. David Clark, have taken a keen interest in the Burtons and are proud of their work. They will be rewarded with another year at the club.

Both Danny, the 21-year-old redhaired, and Alan, 22, are products of Chevy Chase Golf Club, having caddied there for some eight years before wearing the professional toga. Alan's father-in-law is the venerable Scot, Sandy Douglas, Chevy Chase caddymaster. Alan worked in the golf shop at Chevy Chase before joining Army and Navy.

The Burtons have announced that next year they are going in for quite a bit of active golfing. They expect to do plenty of practicing during the winter months. Danny is a smooth-swinging player, who puts lots of dynamite in his drives. Six years ago, Danny says, he couldn't miss his iron shots. Today it is this part of the game that is giving him trouble. When this defect is ironed out, sorrell-topped Danny expects to be clicking away at the low 70's with monotonous regularity. He has scored two 69's over the rolling Army and Navy course, and expects to break the unofficial mark with a 67 before next spring.

These Burtons have a novel way of instructing Army and Navy golfers. Alan does most of the teaching; Danny escorts the pupils around the course. Both lads have the same ideas about how to play golf.

Work on the new nine-hole course at Army and Navy is expected to be resumed in the next few months. Thus far only two holes have been laid out. In the meantime, the present 18-hole layout will be revamped, with indications that the 276-yard first and 268-yard sixth will be lengthened. These two holes are par fours, and are productive of numerous birdies, and quite a number of eagles.

It is interesting to note that neither hole is any longer than the par 3 tenth at Kenwood.

While 70 has never been broken at Army and Navy, officials are going to make the course even tougher by inserting traps freely along the fairways and around the greens.

NEW ATHLETICS PROGRAM.

Report Session Launches Chest Drive Monday

Chairman Hogan Confident of Success; Tributes Paid Workers.

Official opening of the Community Chest campaign for 1934 will take place tomorrow at a report meeting at 12:15 o'clock in the large ballroom of the Willard Hotel. Frank J. Hogan, campaign chairman, and all chairmen of the various units engaged in soliciting, will be present to hear results of the work of solicitors the last few days.

While solicitation has been under way most of the week there has been no report as to what percentage of the approximately $1,945,000 required by the 60 chest agencies for operation this year has been pledged. A large number of pledges are expected for the opening day.

Today will be "Community Chest Sunday" in churches here. Pastors of all Catholic churches in the city will read a pastoral letter from the Most Rev. Michael J. Curley, Archbishop of Baltimore, urging participation of congregations in the work of the Chest.

Topic for Pastors.

Pastors of virtually all the Protestant churches either will preach a special sermon regarding the Chest, mention it in their regular sermons, or have a speaker from the Chest Speakers' Bureau to outline needs of the Chest this year.

On the eve of opening the campaign, Mr. Hogan professed optimism as to the final outcome.

"We have the finest organization in the history of the Community Chest," Mr. Hogan said. "Even now it seems almost incredible that an army of 6,000 devoted volunteers could be rallied for any one cause in Washington, but they have rallied and they are going forward with no thought except that of ultimate victory.

"On every hand we have received magnificent cooperation. The daily newspapers, in addition to the vast amount of space they are giving in their unpurchasable news columns, have each contributed a large amount of display advertising space for which the Chest pays not one penny. Further, they and their employes make substantial cash donations to the Chest.

Aided by Merchants.

"Our leading merchants have donated use of their windows for displays showing the work of the various Chest agencies; our streets are placarded with posters of all sizes bringing to the public the appeal of the Community Chest; our Women Crusaders, under the leadership of Mrs. Eleanor Patterson, are carrying the message of the Chest by word of mouth to their friends and neighbors; our motion picture theaters have not only donated lobby displays but are giving us time on every program this year for a motion picture depicting the need of the Chest agencies this year.

"We of the campaign committee are delighted and heartened at this wonderful display of cooperation. We feel the people of Washington are awake to the needs that confront the city. We feel that Washington citizens know that despite the unemployment relief situation taken over by the Government and being met with public funds, there remains the original task of carrying forward private welfare agencies for which the Community Chest was organized in 1929.

Workers Enthusiastic.

"Our workers are displaying the acme of enthusiasm. I have sat in meetings of the special gifts unit, of which Corcoran Thom is chairman; of the group solicitation unit, of which Walter B. Clarkson is chairman; of the metropolitan unit, of which Joseph D. Kaufman is chairman, and of the governmental unit, headed by Lieut. Col. U. S. Grant 3d. The eagerness of the members of these units to start their task and to see that it is thoroughly accomplished has almost astonished me, and yet, knowing as I do the interest of the people of Washington in that cause, I refuse to be astonished even at the enthusiasm these workers display.

"Everybody in Washington is going to know that there is a Community Chest campaign on. From the newspapers, the billboards, the motion picture screen, the radio, with its special dramatizations; the store windows, the light posts and from the highways and byways is going forth the message that the campaign is under way. With all these factors aiding us and with the enthusiastic cooperation we are getting from all of our workers, I do not see how we can fail to attain our goal."

Firemen Plan Supper.

Takoma Park Post Installs Officers

Brown to Urge Broad Changes In Police Areas

Will Ask Hazen to Again Establish Old 4th Precinct.

Reestablishment of the old Fourth Police Precinct, with Capt. Jeremiah Sullivan as its head, will be the first police recommendation to Commissioner Melvin Hazen by Superintendent of Police Ernest W. Brown.

The old precinct was virtually abandoned over two years ago, when the Fourth and Fifth Precincts were merged, and the new Fourth Precinct was established, embracing the entire Southwest area and the Southeast area, from East Capitol street to the river.

Capt. Sullivan is now head of the new Fourth Precinct, which has its quarters in the Southeast section. The transfer of Capt. Sullivan to the reestatblished precinct in the Southwest will not require any additional promotions, according to Maj. Brown.

Would Restore Old Boundaries.

Capt. J. E. Bobo, who is night inspector of police, would be available to fill the new captaincy post. Under Maj. Brown's plan the territory now patrolled by the new Fourth Precinct would be divided into its original boundaries. The present Fourth Precinct would become the Fifth Precinct, and the old Fourth would be reestablished.

Eventually Maj. Brown hopes to divide the present First Precinct into two distinct precincts as it formerly was.

The First Precinct headquarters would be known as Sixth, and a new First Precinct would be established in the downtown area in the vicinity of the new firehouse near Thirteenth and L streets.

Would Cut Second Precinct.

The boundary lines of these precincts would be extended from L street to N or O streets northwest, thus taking in a substantial portion of the Second Precinct, which has the heaviest population of any precinct.

The reason for the division of the new Fourth, as explained by Maj. Brown, is that the area now embraced by the new Fourth is too wide to be effectively patrolled and the precinct headquarters is too remote from many sections of its jurisdiction. All that would be necessary to reestablish the old Fourth would be a cleaning out of the quarters and the transfer of personnel.

$80,000 in Taxes Received at Roanoke

Roanoke, Va., Nov. 18 (Spl.).—Roanoke taxpayers, according to J. H. Frantz, city treasurer, have paid nearly $80,000 in State and city taxes since October 1.

A comparison with previous years was difficult because this year for the first time real estate taxes were split into semi-annual payments and many persons took advantage of the offer in June and July to save a 3 per cent discount.

Petersburg Man Given Moore's School Post

Richmond, Va., Nov. 18 (A.P.).—J. Gordon Bohannon, of Petersburg, yesterday was appointed a member of the State board of education to succeed R. Walton Moore, who resigned to become Assistant Secretary of State.

Mr. Bohannon is a former president of the Virginia State Bar Association and the Virginia State Chamber of Commerce.

Virginian Exercises Citizen Rights 20 Years in Court Error

Norfolk, Va., Nov. 18 (AP).—Frank A. Schmidt, of Newport News, thought for 20 years that he was an American citizen and he exercised the rights of a citizen. Yesterday a decree was entered in the United States District Court here declaring that a decree making Schmidt a citizen by the Circuitt Court of Lunenburg County in 1913 was null and void.

The Lunenberg court granted Schmidt a decree, purporting to grant him American citizenship. The court could have had the authority to do this, but never had taken the necessary legal steps to qualify for granting citizenship. Schmidt and Uncle Sam found out that the decree was null and both agreed to cancel it.

Schmidt now is to file a petition with the Federal Court here for citizenship papers. Under an act passed by Congress in 1932 he can be naturalized without the usual preliminaries by showing that he has exercised the rights of a citizen for many years, not by fraud, but by honest misinformation.

Strong Brings Prize Cattle Here to Be Close to Them

Home Loan Body Official Lets Sisters of Mercy Keep Herd of 35.

JAMES G. STRONG,

James G. Strong, former representative from Kansas and now assistant treasurer of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, owns a herd of 35 prize Holstein cattle.

The cattle were on his farm near Washington, Kans. Strong expects to live permanently in Washington.

So he has brought the cattle to Washington.

"I don't expect to get to Kansas very often any more," he explained, "and I did want to be with my herd once in a while. They are my hobby. That's the way I have my fun, raising cattle and winning prizes at fairs.

"So I looked around for a place to put them here. I thought I might trade my farm for one around here somewhere. Then I learned that the Sisters of Mercy needed some more cattle out at Kentsdale, west of Bethesda. So I made an arrangement for them to keep my herd for three years.

"Now I can go out and see the cattle whenever I want to. What's more, they are going to make some other exhibitors take notice at some of the fairs around here."

The cattle, in two railroad cars, arrived about a week ago.

Strong proudly displays pictures of his prize herd. He has more than 100 blue ribbons and numerous medals won by his cattle.

One of his bulls, "Carnation Inka Matador," was declared All-American champion.

Strong hesitates to put a value on his herd, but says some of the individual animals are worth several thousand dollars.

A VOTE of THANKS

from Mrs. Smith

WE DO OUR PART

Mrs. Smith is the average woman—representing eighty-five per cent of the purchasing power in the retail stores. She offers a vote of thanks to the far-sighted merchant who has joined with his fellows to follow the advice of the President of the United States by adopting a Code—a code dealing first with hours of labor and wages and then with Fair Competition in Advertising and Selling.

Partially the merchant is selfish—unfair methods in advertising and selling injure not only the public, including Mrs. Smith, but also hurt his own business. There is something grand and exhilarating about merchants adopting a strict code for their own policing — legislating against themselves for Truth in Advertising.

The merchant and the public look to the Better Business Bureau. This organization for years has been supported by many Washington business interests, for the mutual protection of the public and legitimate business.

Mrs. Smith will call the Bureau when she suspects a violation of the Code as relating to advertising and selling. Mr. Merchant likewise will ask for prompt and impartial investigation of suspected violations. The Better Business Bureau welcomes its opportunity and pledges itself to see that the Code is enforced.

Girl Is Chained To Lamp-Post By Anti-Nazis

Wanted to Prolong Show Against Germany; 11 Arrested.

To prolong their anti-Nazi demonstration in front of the German Embassy yesterday afternoon, paraders chained an 18-year-old girl to a lamp post and threw away the key.

The marchers, whose activity was sponsored by the Communist Party of Washington, including the girl, were arrested.

The marchers walked past the embassy shouting, "Down with the Nazi murderers!" and carrying banners which said "Up with Soviet Germany!"

Just after they passed the embassy a score of police officers seized the group of 11.

The prisoners were marched toward Thomas Circle, where, in front of the National City Church, the girl was found chained, lecturing the crowd on Communism. With her were two young men.

After trying to free her with a hacksaw, police hammered open the lock.

Charges of disorderly conduct were placed against the chained girl, Sylvia Roth, 18, of 1024 Sixth street northwest, and her two companions, Charles Spencer, 25, and Sidney W. Phillips, 21, same address.

The eleven marchers, two of whom were women, were charged with parading without a permit.

Family and Job Gone; Kills Self

Motorman Drinks Poison After Getting Summons to Face Charge.

Loss of his wife and children and his job and a summons to face a nonsupport charge in Juvenile Court proved too much last night for Truxton Read, 38, a motorman, of 812 Fifth street northeast.

Going to the apartment of his brother, Elmer Read, 810 Fifth street northeast, he drank a cup of poison and was dead when discovby his sister-in-law.

Read's wife, Dorothy, and their three children left him Sunday as the culmination of frequent altercations. Yesterday the Washington Railway & Electric Co. discharged him and a short while later he received a court summons.

Pershing Refused Train Load Of Wine for Army, Aid Reveals

Declined Gift of French 15 Years Ago, Col. Clark Tells Meeting.

A bottle of champagne for every man in the American Army as a Fourth of July present from the French army—something to make a veteran's mouth water even after 15 years—was turned down by Gen. Pershing with thanks, according to Col. Paul H. Clark, Pershing's representative at French headquarters, who spoke at the annual meeting of the members of the First District Field Hospital last night.

Col. Clark said he spent a difficult half hour explaining to Marshal Petain, who made the offer as a friendly gesture, why the American general did not accept it.

This was one of the incidents described by Clark, who has in his possession more than 300 letters he had written at Pershing's behest describing French reactions, thoughts and plans at Petain's headquarters.

He also told the veterans that a French officer explained the presence of a French unit on the left of the line, at the English Channel, with the remark that the French kept their soldiers there because they believed that once the English had complete control of the territory they would never give it up.

"The English have always been the traditional enemies of the French," Clark quoted the officer remarking.

Clark recently completed transcribing the letters and says he hopes soon to publish them.

Three Banks Make Headway Toward Unity

Depositors' Pact Is Being Returned for D. C. Merger.

Progress in formation of the new Mechanics-Franklin Savings Bank was reported yesterday. This bank will be a consolidation of the Franklin National, Washington Mechanics and Mount Vernon Savings Banks.

During the week, officials of Mount Vernon Savings Bank have obtained from its depositors agreements of the merger representing 40 per cent of the required 75 per cent of deposits of that bank.

Early this week forms on which depositors of Franklin National Bank will signify agreement to the combination will be distributed.

The merger plan may be expanded to include United States Savings Bank in the event Col. Wade H. Cooper, president of that bank, is unsuccessful in his present court fight to compel the Treasury Department to reopen this restricted institution independently.

By the Franklin-Mechanics-Mount Vernon merger $2,500,000 in deposits will be made available to Franklin National Bank depositors and $800,000 to Mount Vernon Savings Bank depositors. Washington Mechanics Savings Bank never has been restricted.

Sore Pledges

Howard Frat Underlings Strike at Cleanup.

Fourteen pledges of the Omega Fraternity of Howard University have gone on a strike against overwork and too frequent beatings, it was learned last night.

All but one of the pledges rebelled Thursday night while engaged in their nightly scrubbing of the fraternity house at 1913 Thirteenth street northwest. Yesterday the fraternity refused to accept conditions submitted by the pledges for their return.

These conditions were that the work required of the freshmen be reduced from six to three mornings, with a continuation of the nightly cleanup, that beatings be withheld until the initiation, and that the time of beating at the initiation be reduced from nine to three minutes, with one minute out for resting after each minute's punishment.

D. C. to Spend 3 Million, Give 15,000 Jobs

Civil Works Administration Announces Projects for Made-Work.

With 14,000 job seekers already listed at the United States employment office, the District Civil Works Administration, first in the country to begin functioning, yesterday sped plans to find jobs for them.

Four thousand men who have been on the emergency relief work rolls will be transferred to the 5-day 30-hour work week of the civil works program on Wednesday, with pay ranging from 45 cents an hour for unskilled, to $1.10 an hour for skilled workers. The first to go on the civil works rolls were 4,200 who were transferred last week.

Scores of projects to provide jobs were approved by the District Commisioners, who also are the District Civil Works Administration, at a meeting with department heads yesterday. At the same time they set up a formal works committee with Capt. Howard F. Clark, Assistant Engineer Commissioner, at the head.

Relieved of Other Work.

Capt. Clark was relieved of other duties to handle the works program. Lieut. Robert E. Yorke, Assistant Engineer Commissioner, was named executive secretary of the work assignment committee and of the Civil Works Adminilstration. Commissioner George E. Allen will have general supervision of the program.

Except for a compartively few temporary employes those who will have charge of the work will be District department heads and executives who have been whipping the work program into shape since President Roosevelt announced his purpose to expend $400,000,000 throughout the country on approved civil works to aid in relieving unemployment.

With additional supplies and help the employment office at 480 Indiana avenue northwest was kept all day yesterday and will be open again today. Additional representatives were stationed at the District woodyard to register those seeking jobs.

Officials are proceeding on the basis that jobs will be provided for 15,000 persons from now until February 15. What will happen after that date will depend on what develops in the interim and what Congress does when it convenes in January.

Jobs Given to 100.

Jobs for approximately 100 white collar workers, about half of whom were women, were found yesterday in various offices in the District Building. They were put to work at special tasks which have needed doing but have not been done because of lack of personnel. Officials, however, are wary of seeming to cross Congress and made it clear it is not planned to fill with temporary employes offices in which forces have been reduced or in which Congress refused to appropriate for employes for specific work.

Capt. Herbert C. Whitehurst, engineer of highways, in charge of trucks and road and other machinery to be used in the projects, yesterday invited owners of trucks to hire them to the District. Trucks will be hired under an open-bid system and will be paid for at a scale ranging from 95 cents for the lightest to $2.50 an hour for the heaviest trucks used. The amount represents payment for truck and driver.

Capt. Clark estimated the total expended in the made-work drive will be in the neighborhood of $3,000,000, which will come out of the President's $400,000,000 Federal fund. Of the District expenditures, approximately $750,000 will be for materials and the balance for wages.

"Pinkie" Comes to Join Post's Toy and Doll Christmas Group

Wanda Geary, Pinkie and five of Wanda's dolls, all of whom joined The Post's Toy and Doll Fund campaign yesterday.

Wandy Geary, 8, Presents Cute Little Dog With Other Donations.

Pinkie, a cute dog made of pink and white wool, with interior of cotton, bright eyes of beads and his mouth showing a quizzical smile, is going to keep the Big Bad Wolf out of the home of some lad or lassie on Christmas eve through the Washington Post Toy and Doll Fund.

Pinkie arrived at the headquarters of the Santa Claus Lady at The Washington Post yesterday in the arms of 8-year-old Wanda Geary, of 640 Buchanan street northwest.

Wanda, who signed up as a Santa Claus aid right away, could tell little of Pinkie's early history, because he had been picked up and brought home from a Washington park by her little terrier dog, Jill. Jill had been passing by and saw Pinkie lying under a bench looking so cold and miserable she had to bring him to kind little Wanda.

Owner Never Found.

As Wanda and her parents never found the owner of Pinkie, they decided she might bring him down to The Post Toy and Doll Fund to do good to others by collecting toys for the fund. Just so he wouldn't be lonsome in the big Post offices, five members of Wanda's doll family came with him to share the vigil until Christmas Eve, when all of them would do their part in keeping needy children from going without a Merry Christmas.

So the dolls would be comfortable, Wanda brought along a tiny perambulator which certainly will delight the heart of some child on Christmas morning. She brought an armful of books, too. Best of all, she wore a Christmas-time smile, although one could see she was thinking about Thanksgiving turkey, too.

The Post Toy and Doll Fund did not go past the first $100 mark yesterday as The Post Toy Fund people had hoped. But it takes some time for such a snowball of good cheer and generosity to get started. Every little gift is a push to put that Post Fund snowball over the top by Christmas Eve.

Message From Santa.

A radiogram came in from Santa Claus last night. He was staying up late at the South Pole to listen in on Admiral Byrd, who made his first expedition broadcast at 10:30. It was full of good wishes to The Post Toy and Doll Fund and congratulations on what it hal already accomplished.

"Do not be discouraged," wired the kind old Saint. "Think of the millions of children whose stockings I have to fill around the world. After all, you can win in your desire not to have any child in Washington go without a Merry Christmas if the people of your city will all help. I echo the prayer of Tiny Tim, the little Christmas boy of Charles Dickens, 'God bless you, every one.'"

Everybody smiled when that radiogram was read. It is something that can be done—this task of the Post Toy and Doll Fund if all get together and make certain that it does not fail.

All contributions to the Post Toy and Doll Fund should be sent to The Washington Post, Washington, D. C., and acknowledgment of each and every gift will be made in The Post columns at as early a date as possible.

Dondero Held On Arkansas Larceny Count

Charge on Emblem Store Manager Creates Mystery.

Mystery last night surrounded the arrest of A. H. Dondero, 1718 Pennsylvania avenue northwest, manager of an emblem store, on a bench warrant from Pulaski County, Ark., charging grand larceny and embezzlement. Dondero was arrested yesterday by Detective Sergt. W. D. Schreyer, of the Fugitive Squad.

Arraigned before Judge Isaac R. Hitt in Police Court, Dondero was released on his personal bond. An extradition hearing was scheduled in 30 days by Judge Hitt.

Dondero, who served with the American Expeditionary Force as a spy during the World War, said he was amazed at the warrant.

"I have never been in Arkansas in my life. It is all a ridiculous mistake," Dondero said.

Chauffeur Held In Hit-Run Death

New Jersey Clews Bring Quick Arrest Here.

A fantastic bit of detective work by police of Atlantic City, N. J., last night led to the arrest of a colored chauffeur here, less than 24 hours after the victim of a hit-and-run accident died in a New Jersey hospital.

Curtis Robinson, said to be the chauffeur of Commodore Charles S. Baird, Philadelphia sportsman, was arrested by Atlantic City and Washington detectives as he entered a house near Ninth and O streets northwest.

While driving the Baird limousine on a New Jersey highway last Sunday, Robinson is alleged to have struck a man walking along the roadway. The man died Friday. Robinson, it was learned, did not stop. His identity was discovered after police traced the machine by an analysis of paint and a dented headlight found on the highway.

Pact to Shield Arts From War Ravages Urged

Delegates of 34 Nations Seek World-Wide Adoption.

Resolutions recommending adoption of an international pact to protect cultural centers in times of war were adopted unanimously at yesterday's final session of the third international convention of the Roerich pact.

Sponsored by the Roerich Museum of New York, the pact is the life work of Dr. Nicholas Roerich, noted painter and founder of the museum. Roerich is at present in the Himalayas organizing a new Roerich Museum research center.

Delegates from 34 nations voted unanimously to send the proposed pact to their governments and recommend its immediate adoption. Sponsors of the plan predict that within a year all nations in the world will be members of the agreement to protect all scientific, artistic, and educational institutions.

Adoption Facilitated.

Countries may adopt the pact by proclamation if they desire, without waiting to attend an international conference. This is designed to facilitate the world-wide adoption, since it eliminates the necessity of waiting for the movement of an unwieldy international body.

The pact would provide registration of all monuments, institutions, collections, missions and churches which would be entitled to protection. The places of registration would be the Court of International Justice at The Hague, the International Institute of Intellectual Cooperation at Paris and the Pan-American Union in Washington. These three bodies can designate organizations in local communities to act as agents.

With registration, each cultural institution would be provided with the banner which designates it inviolable, in the same fashion that a Red Cross banner protects hospitals.

Wallace Heads Committee.

A permanent committee was appointed to forward the convention's resolutions and the proposed pact to all governments with recommendations for signature. The committee is composed of Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, chairman; Louis L. Horch, president of the Roerich Museum; Dr. Charles Fleischer, Prof. Ralph V. D. Magoffin, Mrs. Sina Lichtmann, Henry J. Forman, Dr. E Gil Borges, Mrs. Nettie S. Horch, Miss E. J. Lichtman, Miss Frances R. Grant and M. M. Lichtmann.

Delegates from various countries spoke yesterday in favor of the pact. Toshihiko Taketomi, counselor of the Japanese Embassy, told the convention that his government already had adopted the banner flying it over the Imperial library at Tokyo.

Mrs. Grace Morrisson Poole, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, pledged support of the clubwomen of the world, promising their wholehearted cooperation in getting their nations' signatures.

Others who indorsed the proposal were Senor Don Eduardo L. Vivot, secretary of the Argentina Embassy; Miguel Lopez Pumarejo of Colombia, and Dr. Ricardo J. Alfaro, Minister of Panama.

Auto Driver Killed, One Held, in Crash

Insurance Firm Employe Victim in Collision.

William H. S. Wallace, 32, of 1322 Levis street northeast, an employe of the Prudential Life Insurance Co., was injured fatally yesterday when his automobile collided with another driven by Frank Krautz, 27, Willow Grove, Pa., at Fourteenth street and Maryland avenue northeast.

Police took Wallace to Casualty Hospital where he died several hours later. Krautz was held at Precinct 9 pending an inquest.

Wallace is survived by his widow, Mrs. Elizabeth Wallace, and two children, William, jr., 10, and George Frederick, 8.

Street Lighting Parley Scheduled in Cheverly

The committee charged with installing electric street lights in Cheverly will meet Wednesday night for its second session. Mayor Fred W. Gast, members of the town council and representative citizens are members. The group is campaigning to raise funds by popular subscription for installation of the lights.

The town will operate and maintain the system. The lights will be supplied from meters and the system all will be underground. It is hoped, Mayor Gast said, to have lighting by the time sewerage is installed, probably in the early spring.

Agile Mule

Animal Climbs Aboard Car After Crash.

A dray mule, credited with the aggressiveness of a cavalry charger, caused a fine of $40 or a sentence of 30 days in jail against William F. Brown, colored, 1222½ Union Court southwest, in Traffic Court yesterday.

Brown was charged with reckless driving. Judge Gus A. Schuldt was told that an automobile driven by Brown struck a dray wagon driven by Thomas Douglas, address unlisted, at Sixth and D streets southwest several days ago. Brown pleaded not guilty.

He told the court the mule climbed on the running board of his car.

As a result of the accident, Judge Schuldt learned, before finding Brown guilty, the mule may have to be destroyed.

New Bedroom Furniture Seen In Model Home

Post Dwelling on 28th Street Is Opened for Inspection.

Particularly attractive is the furnishing of the bedrooms of The Washington Post model home at 4517 Twenty-eighth street northwest, now open for inspection. The complete furnishing of this display dwelling has been carried out in a delightful manner by Hutchison's, Inc., under the personal supervision of F. W. Hetzel, manager of that corporation.

As you return to the main center hall you will find a winding stairway, leading to the second floor, covered with a broadloom carpet in a green pastel shade, which leads to the second-floor hallway. In this large hall you will find a Duncan Phyfe love settee, an Empire piece, covered in true Empire style, a blue fabric with a little touch of gold. On the opposite wall there is a Sheraton console table with a lift top leaf in solid mahogany. An old Sedgewick mirror is hanging on the wall. The rug on this floor is an imported Oriental.

Master Bedroom Pleasing.

As you walk into this hall you will enter the master bedroom of the home. This is a most delightful room, carried out in green and golden yellow shades to an effect that is most pleasing. The furniture is of a French Empire period reproduction, a suite of satinwood throughout, inlaid with beautiful woods and trimmed in ebony and gold.

It consists of twin beds, a bureau with a hanging mirror, a lady's dressing table with a hanging mirror, a chest of drawers and chairs and bedside tables. The floor is covered with a room-size rug in a green pastel shade matching the general color scheme of the room.

Bedroom Is Cheerful.

There are two boudoir chairs, one in the green color of the room and the other a very large, comfortable chair with ottoman to match in a contrast shade of deep old rose. Hand-made hooked rugs are scattered on the floor, and the lamps are worthy of special mention. This is truly a cheerful and restful bedroom. The glass curtains are of a ruffled style, in peach shade organdy.

The guest room of the house is adjacent to the master bedroom. It is furnished in walnut throughout, a pair of four-poster twin beds and the rest of a complete suite. Worthy of notice is the construction and quality of this furniture. It is of dark, burl walnut quartered and matched select grain—really a fine suite.

This room has a room-size rug of a rust shade and a lovely glazed chintz boudoir chair in a rust color. The windows are draped with valance and overdrapes tied back in a blue pastel shade moire. There are several handmade hooked rugs scattered about.

Red Mahogany Employed.

At the front of the house is another bedroom furnished in a red mahogany suite consisting of a double bed, a bureau with a hanging mirror and a lowboy with a hanging mirror. This is of a colonial design. The boudoir chair is upholstered in green silk damask with a bench to match. The rugs are hooked, in scatter sizes. The windows are overdraped with glazed chintz.

On the back of the house there is another bedroom furnished in maple furniture, consisting of six-piece double bed suite in curley maple of a William and Mary period, with a highboy. The room has a wing chair upholstered in glazed chintz, trimmed in maple. The hooked rugs are very appropriate for this setting. The windows, set in an alcove, are draped with glass curtains.

The modified regulations incorporate in important respects changes asked by the National Association of Real Estate Boards in public hearings held by the commission on October 3 and in a 226-page memorandum-brief filed with the commission October 11.

Colonial Type Model Home Attracts Many

Kitchen Is But One Feature of Westmoreland Hills Dwelling.

Scores of interested Washingtonians inspected the new furnished model home in Westmoreland Hills last Sunday.

It is a true colonial type, of brick and clapboard construction, well insulated with rock wool to assure warmth and fuel economy in winter and cool comfort during Washington's hot summers.

The home was built on a generously proportioned site, having 75 feet of frontage on a beautiful, winding, tree-sheltered street, a few blocks from Massachusetts avenue, at Westmoreland Circle. Every window offers a good view of the wooded hills and parkland that literally surround this new community.

The kitchen of this model home is one that wins admiration of women who appreciate time-saving and labor-saving conveniences.

In fact, many have exclaimed, "It would be a pleasure to cook in this kitchen."

Electric Stove Saves Time.

There is one of the latest type General Electric Hotpoint electric stoves, with automatic oven control, which means that the housewife can have her entire meal cooking while she is downtown shopping, at a matinee or playing bridge.

There is an abundance of built-in cabinet space. The kitchen also features a large G. E. refrigerator and built-in electric fan ventilation to remove cooking odors and to assure comfort in summer.

In addition to the kitchen, dining room, living room, entrance hall and lavatory, there is an informal library, or study, on the first floor, paneled in "knotty pine." Plenty of book-shelves have been built in and the room is exceptionally cheerful.

The recreation room, in the basement, also is paneled in knotty pine and has a large open fireplace. Another fireplace (both are of native stone construction) adds to the charm of the living room.

Ample Second-Floor Space.

Despite the long, sloping roof of the Westmoreland Hills model home, there is a surprising amount of space on the second floor. There are three good-sized bedrooms and two fully tiled baths. One bath has a tub and the other a large built-in shower.

Plenty of closet space is provided and a full attic assures and abundance of storage space.

A detached garage of colonial design to harmonize with the home, is located just a few steps from the kitchen door.

A "Quiet May" Oil Burner, with a vapor heating system and concealed radiation assures economy as well as comfort and convenience.

The model home will be open throughout today and every one interested in modern homemaking is invited to inspect it. Westmoreland Hills, the sensibly restricted community in which this new model home is situated, is reached by way of Massachusetts avenue. The entrance to the property is on Westmoreland Circle, at the District line.

Building Congress Urges Code Action

Roosevelt Gets Request From New York.

Prompt approval of the code of fair competition for the construction industry as submitted by the Construction League of the United States was urged by the executive committee of the New York Building Congress in a resolution which has been forwarded to President Roosevelt and Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, National Recovery Administrator.

The committee in its resolution said the league's proposed recovery code was "the only one submitted which will insure the unification and stabilization of this industry." Early approval of these rules, the group stated, would mean a revival of building operations.

The code is now ready for final action after four months of preparation by the code committee of the construction league, of which S. F. Voorhees, former president of the building congress, is chairman.

Many Visitors For Lightbown Foxhall House

3,000 Have Seen Unusual Dwelling of Beauty and Utility.

Popularity of the Lightbown home offerings increases daily. Few residential presentations have won the public's appreciation so completely as the model home now exhibited at Foxhall road and P street northwest, featuring this showing. More than 3,000 persons have visited this house, presented by Cooper Lightbown & Son, during the brief time of its presentation.

The home, one of an original group of six, is open for inspection daily from 9 a. m. to 9 p. m. Three homes in this offering already have been sold.

The homes, of English cottage type, are located on a ridge which descends to the Potomac River Valley at the west and at the east to the U. S. Government Foundry Branch Parkway. This location offers a quiet, suburban-like atmosphere, which is but 10 minutes from the White House.

The homes have a southern exposure and are set well back on terraced and landscaped lawns with a red-brick retaining wall.

Colors Are Features.

Front elevations have been given a varied but harmonious treatment with rich, red sand-finished colonial brick; sloping roof lines of varicolored and sized slate, stained dormer windows framed in cypress, cream-colored stucco and quaint apple-green shutters. Heavy copper gutters, down spouts and flashings add to the beauty and permanence of the group.

Deep, inviting concrete porches with sturdy iron railings and heavy, rustic posts of Douglas fir offer a real opportunity for pleasant relaxation. Long "steamer deck" lines are used for the first time in porch design on this type.

The corner home has a special separate vestibule entrance, with large double-screened porches on the side of the house, entered through double French doors off the dining room and the upstairs bedroom.

Living rooms have been planned to giev the maximum of wall space possible in a well-balanced room.

A log-burning fireplace is the central feature of this room. With a simple dignified, colonial mantel; a 1-inch black slate facing and a hearth of red and brown shaded tile, this is most effective.

Floors Are Oak.

Oak floors have been hand scraped, machine buffed and given a special stainless treatment which preserves their beauty, with a little care, indefinitely.

A studio-size steel casement window facing the south floods this room with light and air. A heavy, brass stair rail with ornamental iron balustrades gives an unusual touch.

Woodwork is given a warm cream, satin finish. All interior doors are six-panel colonial, with glass knobs and brass fittings. Window shades are heavy washable piquet.

Arch Joins Rooms.

A delicately rounded arch connects the living room with the dining room, well proportioned and typically colonial in decorative treatment with chair rail. Attractive scenic and burlap effect wallpaper, concealed radiation and colonial designed pewter-finish fixtures complete the above room.

In the kitchen a cheerful flower and lattice design of washable sanitas adorns the walls. Colorful "A" grade linoleum cemented down to felt covers the floor. A complete Oxford cabinet unit supplies ample cupboard room, drawer space and broom closet. The 6-foot double drainboard sink faces a wide steel casement window with deep tile sill.

General Electric equipment is featured with a large G. E. monitor top refrigerator of most recent design with steel cabinet and porcelain finish. The G. E. Hotpoint electric range is completely automatic and keeps the kitchen cool and clean.

An electric ventilating fan is used which will displace 800 cubic feet of air a minute—a joy in hot weather. Double electric plugs are placed in a handy location. A G. E. electric clock is on the wall.

All electric equipment is handled by special power meter giving the consumer a low commercial cost rate.

To reach the home, take the Foxhall Village bus, get off at Foxhall road and walk two blocks south to P street. It also may be reached by taking the Glen Echo street car to Foxhall road and walking one block north to P street.

Beautiful New Mikkelson Home in Beechwood

Post Staff Photo.

New residence at 6506 Meadow lane, in Beechwood, Chevy Chase, Md., built for Mr. and Mrs. James L. Mikkelson by G. F. Mikkelson & Son. This is a Norman-Colonial type home containing six rooms, two baths and a first floor library.

Simple Test Shows Value Of Good Light

Electric League Starts Movement to Help Lamp Buyers.

Beauty, art, decoration and utility are all major considerations in the selection of portable lamps for reading, writing, sewing, game playing and other pastimes of the long fall and winter evenings.

Because of this and because authorities on eye conservation are pointing to the importance of adequate and proper illumination, the Electric League of Washington is starting to assist in selecting and using lighting devices.

One authority has devised a very simple but effective means of testing the degree of efficiency of a lighting source. The telephone book is printed compactly but with a type that is clear and designed to be easy to read.

Select two names from a phone book, under good illumination; then try to find them, the first by means of a lamp which you have felt may not be all that you expect of it, and the second by means of a lamp which properly distributes a sufficient quantity of light. The comparative ease in finding the second name may be surprising.

Tests Show Defective Vision.

Forty college students in every 100 recently tested were found to be suffering from some form of defective vision.

In the selection of a lamp, regardless of the price which is being paid for it, there are a few simple tests that are worth remembering. Your own taste, and your knowledge as to the ultimate location of the lamp will dictate that it must be pleasing to the eye, both lighted and unlighted.

But if it is a lamp to be used for reading, you should sit down beside it, with book in hand, to see if it throws the light where it is wanted. Open top shades are most desirable because they allow a part of the light to go to the ceiling and thus illuminate the room to some extent.

It is not good for the eyes to read against an entirely black background. The shade of your lamp should be large enough to avoid scorching, and deep enough to completely hide the bare lamps. In proper lighting, the brilliance of the light source is not the deciding element. The intensity of the illumination on the book or work surface is the important thing. Every lamp shade should be light-colored inside and not too highly colored outside.

Demonstrations to Be Given.

It is unwise to read or write, or to use lamps, when you are facing the light. When this is done the direct glare from the lamp will strain the eyes. Never read or write in your own shadow. If you are right handed the lamp belongs at your left.

Floor lamps should be placed slightly behind and to one side of an easy chair so that the bare bulb will not meet the line of vision. Of course there should be a lamp for every chair, and for each end of the davenport.

These are only some of the simple but highly valuable sight saving facts about the art of home lighting which have been gathered by the lighting committee of the Electric League and which will be demonstrated in a series of talks to be made before various associations of home makers.

Spring Water Credited For Woman's Longevity

Hornell, N. Y. (U.P.)—With the recent death of Mrs. Laura M. Goodwin at 95, residents recalled her oft-repeated boast that her good health resulted from persistent refusal to drink city water.

Friends, who remarked about her good health despite her advanced years, inevitably would hear her say:

"Now that's because I don't drink city water. Clear, cold spring water was made for man to drink and not this canned pipe water you get in the city."

Before her death, Mrs. Goodwin was taken to a hospital suffering from a broken hip. There, for the first time in her life, she was compelled to drink city water.

Post's Model Home Causes Admiration, Much Comment

Dwelling in Forest Hills Presented by Jones and Built by Johnson.

It has been a long time since a display dwelling has caused such widespread admiration and comment as that now sponsored by The Washington Post and presented by Edw. H. Jones & Co., Inc.

The house, at 4517 Twenty-eighth street northwest, in the Forest Hills section, was built by Carl I. Johnson, from plans prepared by Harvey P. Baxter. Its interior decoration includes furnishings by Hutchison's, Inc., draperies by Thomas T. Johnson, rugs by Manoukian Bros., and a baby grand piano by Homer L. Kitt Co.

The house, situated in the beginning of a fine residential development, is equipped with a three-car garage, two sections of which are under the structure and one at the side on a ground-floor level. The property adjoints the former Senator Gore and the O'Brien estates.

Arrangements Described.

The large first-floor entrance is characterized by an electric Westminster chimes doorbell with a 24-tone range. There is also a convenient coat and cloak closet and a lavatory off the entrance hall.

At the left of the reception hall is a handsome library finished in knotted pine paneling. Back of the hall is an unusually large and well-lighted room, which gives access to the right piazza through a French doorway. Both afford views of the splended garden with its oaks and poplars, flagstone paths and pool. A left piazza extends over the garage.

The living room at the right of the hall is beautified by a stately fireplace and alcove. Left of the dining room is a complete culinary section, consisting of thoroughly equipped kitchen, butler's pantry and breakfast room. The kitchen is arranged conveniently with tiled sink, built-in cabinets and stove in an alcove.

The basement space is divided into garage, gardener's storage, laundry room, servant's toilet and lavatory. The subbasement contains the heating plant, oil burner, gas storage equipment, hot-water service, chauffeur's quarters and bath.

Predominant in this division is the immense clubroom, two stories in height. This wonderful room is 30 by 20 feet in dimensions and is furnished with open fireplace and decorated with ornamental ceiling and cornice and imported Swedish steel chandelier.

Second-Floor Rooms.

The second floor is apportioned into four large and well-ventilated bedrooms, each with cedar-lined closets. Two have private baths, one with shower. There is a private bath for the master bedroom, which has a fireplace, and one for the guest room. There is another hall bathroom. Two large closets of entirely new arrangement add to the convenience of the prospective dwellers.

The third floor is wisely arranged for ample storage space. It has three rooms for general service purposes, two for storage and a complete bath.

Other noteworthy features of the home's construction are its insulation of mineral wool, concealed radiation, weather stripping throughout, marble fireplaces, copper gutters and downspouting. Its beauty is enhanced by a slate roof with random width shingles of variegated coloring.

The home may be visited by driving out Connecticut avenue to Albemarle street; then turning right to Twenty-eighth street and left to the home as indicated by the road sign. It is open daily from 10 a. m. to 9 p. m.

House Space Problem Seen By M. J. Luchs

Shortage of Medium-Price Apartments Should Be Considered.

With approximately one-third of the city's families already domiciled in apartments, the drift to this mode of living by an army of temporary residents and the likelihood of any decisive break in the long stalemate which has been holding up such construction remote, Washington soon may find itself facing an acute shortage of medium-priced apartment house space, in the opinion of Morton J. Luchs, vice president of Shannon & Luchs Co., realtors.

The disintegration of households drawn together in group living arrangements through the necessity for retrenching is under way and the split-up already is being reflected in the demand for two, three and four-room accommodations, Mr. Luchs reports.

"This, with several other unusual factors, combine to create a condition unique in the local apartment rental market," Mr. Luchs continued.

"Additions to the civil service payrolls for the District in October show a gain over dismissals of approximately 3,000, while the increase for September was in excess of 1,700. This, of course, takes no cognizance of the workers added to the Government lists for 'temporary' service within the city or the hundreds of new employes brought here to man the local offices of more than 75 Nation-wide industries for which codes already have been approved.

All Manifest Caution.

"Insofar as they affect rental conditions, the person who is breaking away from a shared-apartment arrangement, the new Government employe and the code worker may be catalogued in the same class. Most of them have known unemployment at some period during the last four years and the income of virtually all have fallen since 1929.

"While hopeful of the future, all are inclined to be more cautious of financial commitments. Moreover, many of them have become habituated to the use of less living space and to a more rigid adherence to budgetary rules. In consequence they are demanding modern, compact, moderately priced living quarters and it will require no abnormal demand to speedily exhaust Washington's present supply."

Mr. Luchs sees no likelihood of a revival in apartment-house construction on any appreciable scale until confidence in the security of such investment has been materially strengthened or, until some tangible inducement to return to such enterprise is offered. This, he believes, should increase sharply the market value of existing dwellings of this type.

"The extent to which Washington has fallen behind in the normal production of apartment-house space may be judged from a study of the survey just concluded by the F. W. Dodge Corporation," Mr. Luchs went on. "This survey shows the normal annual requirements of the Nation in residential construction of all types to be 215,000 units. During 1932, 65,000 such units were provided and an estimate for 1933 runs no higher. Construction of apartments in Washington during this period was little, if any, above the average for cities of its class.

"This sudden stoppage of new construction led naturally to the splitting up of large apartments into smaller units in efforts to meet the normal expansion in demand for medium-priced space, but there is a limit to what can be done along this line, especially in Washington.

Intricate Problems Faced.

"Most of our older apartment structures were constructed along individual lines and with a view to permanence, adding to the difficulties and increasing the expense of any rearrangement. In many of these structures splitting up would involve problems more intricate than the architect working on new plans would be called upon to face.

"Washington, according to the statistical department of the Washington Real Estate Board, has just 1,449 structures which properly can be listed as apartment houses. In these are housed some 40,000 of the city's 125,000 families.

"The District, in fact, has a greater percentage of apartment dwellers than any other city in the country and save for New York, Chicago and Los Angeles more apartment space than any other municipality. This latter fact, however, offers no solution in the problem of providing moderately priced space to meet the expected natural expansion since most of this space is made up of large, elaborate units which can not be divided at other than prohibitive cost."

Rugs Major Item in Home Furnishing Floor Covering Enhances Beauty of Post's Model Exhibit.

Importance of rugs in the furnishing of a home must not be overlooked. Manoukian Bros., importers, interpreters and appraisers of Oriental weaves, have not lost sight of this in their excellent provision of rugs for The Washington Post model home at 4517 Twenty-eighth street northwest, now open for inspection.

At the entrance is found a semi-antique Serebend with Oriental palm leaf designs, which is supposed to bring good luck to the owner.

A sense of glamour is given to the hallway by the mellow tones of an antique Beshir Boukhara of unusual texture and workmanship. Boukharas are made in Turkestan, where the people express their nomadic life in the beautiful designs significant of their tribes.

Dignity is given to the library by a semiantique Princess Boukhara, which is the richest and finest type of the Boukhara family. A rich effect has been acquired in the dining room by placing an antique Serapi there, which is a museum piece. Its artistic Oriental design and subdued blending of colors lend to the harmony of the home.

The beautiful shades of the one-piece Kandahar rug in the living room serve to enhance the delicate color scheme of the building.

Foreclosures Decrease Throughout Country

Foreclosures have decreased over the country by 19.5 per cent in the last three months for which statistics have been gathered by the Federal Government. The figure is for September as compared to June. They have decreased over the country by 9.2 per cent in the last month of that period alone, according to the division of research and statistics of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board and the Home Owners Loan Corporation, the charting agency.

Reports are for all types of property, including farms and commercial property. They cover 1,037 communties in 48 States. Except for the month of April this year, the September total is the lowest of any month since February, 1932.

Higbie Firm Moves To K Street Dec. 1

Corporation Long Identified With Realty Circles.

The firm of Higbie, Richardson & Franklin, Inc., is moving from 816 Fifteenth street northwest, where it has been located for 12 years, to 1514 K street northwest, effective December 1.

This corporation, long and prominently identified with real estate circles here, was organized in 1917 as Higbie & Richardson, Inc., and began business at 1504 H street northwest. It had offices there for four years. In 1927, Lafayette Franklin became a member of the firm, which was reincorporated as Higbie, Richardson & Franklin. L. W. Richardson and Mr. Franklin are surviving members of the corporation.

This organization in its successful existence has negotiated such important transactions as sales of the Chastleton, Windermere, Harrowgate, Schuyler Arms, Rutland Courts, Cavanaugh Courts, St. Albans, Lonsdale Apartments, and apartments at 1919 and 1921 Nineteenth street northwest, 2700 Connecticut avenue, 1815 S street northwest, 2501 and 2601 Calvert street northwest, Parkside Hotel and numerous other buildings as well as the incorporation of the Kedric Apartments.

Exhibits Prove Public Eager To Buy Homes

Thousands Lacking Cash Inspect Models With Eyes on Future.

Sharp and sustained interest shown by the many observers attracted to model home exhibits sponsored by Washington newspapers during the summer and autumn shows the urge to ownership is strong, whatever the final sales records for the year may be, in the opinion of John L. Weaver, dean of Washington realtors.

Few attend these openings simply to satisfy curiosity, he says, adding: "Most of them still cling to the hope of finding eventually an exquisite small home to fit a modest pocketbook.

"There is nothing wrong with the market. The appeal of home ownership has been intensified rather than diminished by the depression. In spite of arbitrarily imposed vacations and pay slashes there are today probably more good risks among potential home buyers than there were in the extravagant times of 1928-29. Anyway, every one has gained a keener appreciation of the value of the dollar and come by a more thorough understanding of the meaning of financial commitments during the recent years of grief.

"The plain truth is that we have not gone after business where the business is.

"Any merchant who willfully ignored 75 per cent of the potential trade of his neighborhood would receive scant sympathy in his grouchings over the dullness of trade, yet that is precisely what is being done by the operative builders of Washington and other cities.

"Most of the persons to be found in the long queues passing through and avidly exclaiming over the modern marvels of this or that model home are members of this forgotten 75 per cent.

"While each of these offerings is indubitably a splendid buy at the price, the fact remains that comparatively few of these eager visitors can safely commit themselves for more than $5,000 or $6,000 in the purchase of a home. The will to buy is strong, but the means are limited, consequently an army of would-be home owners remains perforce an army of tenants.

"We recall the not so distant day when the responsible client with a few thousand dollars to invest demanded and promptly received every consideration in the real estate market. This attitude on the part of builder and salesman must be revived. To debar three-fourths of our families from home ownership because they can pay only $6,000 instead of $16,000 for a modern, comfortable and attractive home in these times of stress is not only arrant economic nonsense, but plain social injustice as well."

Small Loan Banks Urged for Relief

E. R. Munn Asks National Chain for U. S. Funds.

The establishment of a national small loan bank with branches scattered through the country and which would be financed by Reconstruction Finance Corporation funds would go far toward hastening the recovery plan, E. R. Munn said recently. The bank would lend not more than $5,000 to an individual. Mr. Munn believes this would be a better way of refinancing the country than by the relay method, which would place the money into the hands of large banks, which in turn would pass it out in amounts and through channels favorable to the banks.

The Government by dealing directly with the individual and limiting the amount of each loan, would create widespread financial relief, reviving purchasing power, in many homes and many communities, Mr. Munn declares.

"The immediate benefits to real estate from the adoption of this plan would be tremendous," he said. "The large sums now due for rent, interest and taxes could be met immediately, releasing funds needed by owners, mortgage companies and civic governments for use in repairs and improvements. Of equal importance, these payments would result in the investing public receiving a return which it would put in circulation through purchasing necessities for their families and themselves. Others would be in a position to replenish their wardrobes, replace their wornout belongings of every description and provide an impetus to recovery."

Washington Will Get Wilton Dress Store

Wilton Dress Stores, Inc., a chain store corporation, having its principal office in New York City, has leased a store in the Homer Building, 603 Thirteenth street northwest, for the sale of women's coats, suits and dresses. Leo Kossove, attorney, represented the tenant, and H. Clifford Bangs represented S. Kann Sons Co., owners.

The one-story store known as 3315 Connecticut avenue was leased to John A. Gamage for a term of years. The property is to be used for the sale of periodicals, light lunch and is to contain a circulating library.

Law on Tenement Houses Not Obeyed

The New York tenement house law of 1867 prescribed that not more than 65 per cent of any lot should be built upon, but according to Langdon W. Post, writing in the East Side Chamber News, the Board of Health, whose duty it is to protect the health of the community, permitted 85 per cent and even 90 per cent coverage of the lot, when they allowed tenements of four, five and six stories to be erected on the lawns in front of the original dwellings, thus turning the latter into "rear houses," condemned these 30 years as unsanitary and unhealthful. On the lower East Side alone more than 1,000 families still occupy such "rear houses."

Probably half the tenement population still lives in buildings that were below the new law standards in 1901. A great many of the old law tenements are really uninhabitable and are too out-of-date to permit remodeling. Where this is the case they need to be demolished.

Figures to Tell U. S. Low Cost Home Demand

Data to Be Presented to Lending Agencies by House Builders.

When residential builders from all parts of the United States meet here December 4 and 5 they will have with them "irrefutable" figures to show the Government lending agencies that there is a Nation-wide demand for new low-cost homes, according to Elisabeth Mary Shoemaker, Chicago, chairman, publicity committee, Home Builders and Land Developers' national committee.

The committee is seeking $1,000,000,000 already appropriated in the P. W. A., Home Owners' Loan Corporation and other funds for first-mortgage financing of new structures.

Two thousand questionnaires were mailed out from the committee's headquarters in Cleveland recently to every firm and individual in the business, and, incidentally, a careful check by the committee reveals 2,000 firms still are in this business.

Purposes of Survey.

These questionnaires not only will be used to take a poll of the amounts wanted individually in each community, but will collect interesting data on savings actually ready to go into this market from each community and on the occupations where such savings are to be found.

"P. W. A. officials have stated that loans for residential construction might be granted to private building companies if they could be certain that a demand existed among employed people," says Miss Shoemaker. "We know we have a demand throughout the country, but we are going to show it to the Washington officials, community by community, to be convincing. In addition, we will show exact occupations of the people who want these new homes so that the Washington meeting can say to Secretary Ickes: 'Here are 10,000 public utility employes, 5,000 clerks, and so on, through the classification we will develop, who want homes.'

Bona Fide Signatures.

"Another feature of the Washington meeting is to be the assembling of an actual petition from the public which will ask Presdient Roosevelt and Secretary Ickes to make loans to the builders in their own communities. Copies of the petitions were mailed out all over the country and these names will be brought into Washington by various delegations.

"Every name on the petition will be a bona fide signature of a person wanting a new home.

"It is vital, if we are to obtain this Government credit, that every organization get these questionnaires and petitions to the committee headquarters by November 30.

"Any organization failing to receive these blanks can procure them by writing to the Home Builders and Land Developers' national committee, Marshall Building, Cleveland."

Folk on Danubian Isle Pay No Taxes

The lot of the families on sleepy Ada Kaleh, an island in the Danube, would be welcomed by many owners of property because they are tax free. There are 700 Turks on the island, which is near the City of Orsova.

A few years ago the Turks knew little of the world depression, for they seldom go to the mainland, but they did know that business was terrible on Ada Kaleh. The merchants displayed their Turkish cigarettes, coffee and sweets, their tapestries and linen work, but no one came to buy the wares. There were taxes to pay and nothing to pay them with.

Then King Carol of Roumania visited the island and was impressed favorably with the fortifications, beauty of the island and the appearance of the inhabitants. The Turks asked the king to restore their freedom from taxes when he asked what he might do for them. So again the people of sleepy Ada Kaleh are free of taxes and business flourishes once more.

Draping Effect Unique in Post Model Home

Tasteful and Distinctive Scheme Masterfully Carried Out.

There is no more charming ensemble imaginable than that effected in the draping scheme of The Washington Post model home at 4517 Twenty-eighth street northwest. This has been masterfully carried out by Thomas T. Johnson.

The decoration by Mr. Johnson is tasteful and distinctive. The hallway is in the popular scenic paper suitable to this type of house and its sylvan surroundings. Hallway drapes have been selected carefully to blend with the color scheme.

Chandeliers, drapes and wall decoration have been carried out according to a unified plan. The living and dining rooms have antique, ivory backgrounds, with two-tone cornices and unusual crystal chandeliers. The dining room decoration is most suitable to English interiors.

In the living room there are wide brackets of English brass, and the alcove's sunlight can be softened by drapes. The library selection includes homespun drapes and rustic chandelier in harmony with the study type and its frieze depicts a German hunting scene, a replica of an old print.

Downstairs drapes are suspended from traverses and substitute for window shades. The clubroom with its high ceiling and paneled walls is done in four different shades of tan with heavy red and blue antique cornice. This blends with real moire damask drapes, forming an unusually pretty treatment for arched windows.

The upstairs decorative plan is executed with careful selections as to respective values. The master bedroom will be admired greatly for its new and unusual paper, marking the first use of paneling of this decorative nature in the city. The drapes are ruffled silk tissue, blending with the papered background.

The guest bedroom is slightly more elegant with its full-length blue taffeta drapes, to the floor. All drapes have been lined to protect them against sunlight and to give them a uniform external appearance.

There is an early American room in curly maple, the window shades of which are simply treated. In the mahogany bedroom there are blue-figured glazed chintz drapes hanging straight from the ceiling. This makes this room unique in its simplicity. The spreads have been made in the same material as the drapes.

Building Permits

Realization of an important District Government construction project began last week when application was filed for a permit to erect a ward for contagious diseases at Gallinger Hospital. The estimated cost of the work is $500,000.

Plans filed tell of a two-story brick structure and provide for addition of a third story if desired. The building will have a cubical content of 900,000 feet. It will consist of a main section 134 feet long and five wings each 82 feet long. Plans were prepared by the Municipal Architect's Office. The builder has not yet been announced.

Ample space has been provided in the subbasement and 33 rooms are included in the basement arrangement. There are more than 300 rooms in the structure; 166 of these are on the first floor and 131 on the second.

Permits issued during the week included those for the following structures:

Tolson, Kemp & Nix, Inc., one-story brick and tile dwelling at 4000 Twentieth street northeast, cost, $5,000.

North Washington Realty Co., two-story brick dwelling at 1401 Locust street northwest, cost, $10,000.

C. C. Miller, jr., 1½-story brick dwelling at 3219 Oliver street northwest, cost, $7,000.

Fidelity Building & Loan Association structural alterations to building at 3068 M street northwest, cost, $1,000.

Raymond Lucas, two-story frame dwelling at 3118 Ninteenth street southeast, cost, $1,500.

"About a year ago we equipped the Monmouth, 1819 G Street N.W., with your Electrolux Gas Refrigerators, on a Master Gas Meter. At that time we included gas for cooking and refrigeration in the monthly rental

"The absolute silence and constant dependability of the gas refrigerator is the pride and joy of all of our tenants, and their satisfaction, together with the unusually low costs of operation, is a source of real satisfaction to us.

"We are convinced that the use of the gas refrigerator, together with cooking and refrigeration included in the monthly rentals, has resulted at the present in the Monmouth with its 114 units being 100% rented.

"As the years pass we are convinced the constant, absolute silence of the Electrolux will make it the most favored type of automatic refrigeration."

Stocks Crawl Up One-Tenth On Quiet Sales

Market Closes Steady as Turnover Drops to 577,800 Shares.

New York, Nov. 18 (AP).—Excitement continued in the financial markets today and Wall street trading had a rather routine appearance.

With dollar fluctuations narrowing—their extreme changes were the smallest in some time—the share market was quiet and steady.

American currency ruled under the foreign moneys, but the confused and wild gyrations had disappeared. No doubt the impression had gained weight that with the R. F. C. gold price unchanged at $33.56 since Tuesday the present policy was toward dollar steadiness, and speculators seemed to have lost interest.

Recognition of Russia.

Russian recognition had little visible effect on the day's dealings. Some of the so-called "Soviet trade" stocks flurried a bit at the active opening of the share market, but their performance was rather lukewarm. Farm implement and other machinery issues were generally firm through the two hours, though many leaders confined their movements to fractions. Mining shares firmed after Friday's tumble. Rails and utilities were slightly off.

General Electric, Allis Chalmers, Harvester, Case, Chrysler, Westinghouse, American Smelting, Dome, McIntyre, U. S. Steel and American Can closed firmly with fractional gains. U. S. Smelting and Du Pont improved about two each.

Allied Chemical's 3-point rise was reduced by two-thirds. Santa Fe, Union Pacific, American Telephone and Consolidated Gas eased. Oils held steady. Sales amounted to 577,800 shares.

Russian Buying Outlook.

The matter of business stimulation as a result of Russian recognition depended, Wall street naturally concluded, upon credit arrangements, and on this point the financial community had little definite information. Potential buying by the Soviets in this country was variously estimated; orders would presumably favor such lines as machinery, tools, railway materials and raw cotton. Meanwhile, it was concluded, the establishment of credit channels may require some time.

British pounds rose to $5.27, up 7 cents, and French francs to 6.38 cents, up .07 cent; the former closed at $5.24¾, the latter at 6.35½ cents.

Business news was meager. The rise of wholesale price indices last month and early in November represents a step toward the desired goal, while industrial barometers are offering some evidence that the seasonal downward trend has been checked. Normally, steel output continues its sag into December, but this year it is believed possible that the usual trend may be reversed as the effect of new public works and rail purchases is felt.

Trade Trends.

(Associated Press.)

Copper—Selling agents for custom smelters are firm at 8¼ cents a pound, although reports in the trade indicated that the actual market is nearer 8 cents or on a parity with the export price. Domestic buying continues small.

Gasoline—Markets are firmer, according to reports from various Eastern centers. In certain sections where competitive situations were unfavorable a month or two ago, there are now visible encouraging signs of stability, according to trade observers.

Wool—In some quarters the opinion is held that activity in foreign markets is helping to maintain prices on domestic grades in the face of slow yarn and piece goods sales.

Heavy chemicals—Seasonal slackening of operations in some of the heavier industrial lines is reflected in a slower demand for several items in this category. It is understood, however, that consumers are showing interest in 1934 contracts and have placed fair sized orders for alkalis, bleaching powder, chlorine and other materials.

Canned foods—Buying was in small volume during the last week, but prices in primary markets showed no important changes.

One Dollar In; Two Dollars Out

Capital Flight Has Been Twice As Large as Recovery Spending

By Ralph West Robey.

It is evident that any program which results in two dollars being taken out of our economic system for every dollar put in scarcely can be successful in restoring prosperity. Nevertheless, according to conservative estimates, that is about what has been happening recently. On the one hand the Federal Government has been pumping funds into our economy as rapidly as possible through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Civil Conservation Corps, the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, the Public Works Administration, the Tennessee Valley project, the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, the Civil Works Administration and the various other agencies that have been established to get purchasing power into circulation. On the other hand, investors through being apprehensive about this great spending program and the current monetary policy have been shifting their money to foreign nations.

Just how much of such flight from the dollar there has been is more or less conjecture. We have no official statistics that are complete enough to provide a basis for an estimate in which one can have complete confidence. Some weeks ago, nevertheless, there was a semiofficial opinion expressed that perhaps it had amounted to as much as $500,000,000. This figure generally was regarded as too low, and private estimates put the aggregate of funds which had left the country at two or three times this amount. Now, however, we have a more definite estimate based upon studies in London, where more data are available. This places the amount of flight from dollars into sterling in the last three months as $375,000,000 and the total flight into all currencies since August at about $1,000,000,000.

Administration Has Spent Only Half This Much for Recovery.

During the same time the great spending program of the Administration has resulted in getting only about half of this amount into circulation. More definitely, between the start of the fiscal year, July 1, and November 15, the total emergency expenditures were $548,595,661. Actually, of course, all of this amount does not properly belong in "emergency" expenditures. A substantial part of it represents expenses that have been shifted out of the ordinary budget into the extraordinary budget in the process of keeping the former in balance. Assume for the present, however, that the entire $550,000,000 has been for emergency purposes. This, then, is the amount which the Administration has been able to pump into the economic system in the way of giving direct and positive financial encouragement to recovery.

Against this is the $1,000,000,000 that has flown the country. If we accept this as reasonably accurate, and most people probably would say that it errs on the side of conservatism, it is easy to see why the great spending program of the Administration has failed to make an appreciable dent on the business curve. Every time it has spent a dollar, American investors have shipped two dollars' worth of capital out of the country; every time the Administration has taken one step forward, the platform upon which it is walking—the capital and business structure of the country—has been moved back two steps. Obviously, before we get far in the direction of prosperity, there will have to be some change in this situation.

Two Courses of Action Open To Stop This Loss of Funds.

In general there are two lines which may be followed in getting such a change. The first is to reverse our domestic program to the extent necessary to restore the confidence of American investors. To do this Federal finances must be put back in good shape and a monetary policy must be adopted that will not be a constant threat to the safety of dollars held in this country. More specifically, we need a repudiation of the current "Cornell" dollar scheme and a return to sound monetary principles, on the one side, and the bringing of Federal expenditures into reasonable limits, on the other side.

The second line which may be followed to stop this loss of two dollars for every one the Government spends, is to prohibit all capital export. This, apparently, is the plan that is to be tried. At least a definite move has been made in this direction within the last few weeks through the foreign exchange control organization of Mr. Fred I. Kent. Such regulation theoretically is workable, and actually has been worked with no small success in some countries. In practice, nevertheless, it always proves to be difficult, and for a considerable time after it is started results in wholesale evasions in scores of ways. Accordingly, control of capital flight does not offer promise for the immediate future.

Unless we want to continue to have a net deflation in our economic system, therefore, the Government must follow one of two courses: First, a repudaition of its currency and great spending programs, or second, pump out funds more rapidly than capital can be shifted out of the country. The latter means printing-press money.

The position of the Treasury November 16 was: Receipts, $10,280,623; expenditures, $28,168,255.97; balance, $1,276,826,446.32; customs receipts for the month, $15,231,514.04.

Receipts for the fiscal year to date (since July 1) were $1,062,139,516.90; expenditures, $1,694,120,091.56, including $563,620,440.07 emergency expenditures; excess of expenditures, $611,980,574.66.

Federal Bonds Turn Easier; Market Sags

Domestic Loans Stand at 70.8 as Sales Total $6,995,000.

New York, Nov. 18 (AP).—Aside from United States Government securities, which were somewhat easier after their rally of yesterday, the bond market generally was content to mark time today in rather dull trading.

Sales totaled $6,995,000, par value, and the average for 60 domestic corporate loans was one-tenth of a point lower at 70.8. This average was off 2.3 points on the week.

The Government section, although relatively quiet, apparently reflected another decline of the dollar in terms of leading European currencies.

Federal Sales Light.

Only $1,700,000 of the Federals changed hands, however, and declines ranged from 3-32ds to 17-32ds of a point. The only two gainers in this list were Liberty 3½s and the uncalled Liberty Fourth 4¼s, which firmed 6-32ds and 2-32ds of a point, respectively.

With another advance in foreign exchange, obligations of the French government recovered 3 to 6½ points, while those of the United Kingdom, Switzerland and Dutch East Indies came back a point or more.

Irish Free State 5s and Italian Public Utility 7s gained about 3 each. Issues of Australia and New South Wales advanced 1½ to 3⅛ points.

On Gaining List.

Advances and losses of an unimportant character were just about even in the domestic department.

Gainers of fractions to around a point included some bonds of American & Foreign power, American Smelting, American Rolling Mill, Armour & Co., Baltimore & Ohio, St. Paul, Rock Island, Consolidated Gas, Detroit Edison, Interborough Rapid Transit, International Telephone, Pennsylvania Railway, Public Service, Wabash and Western Union.

Similar declines were registered by some loans of American Telephone, Union Pacific, Standard Oil of New Jersey, Southern Pacific, Shell Union Oil, St. Joseph Lead, Lackawanna Steel, National Dairy, Columbia Gas and Santa Fe. Boston & Maine 4¾s, an exception, dropped 8¼ points.

Ozark Apple Growers Pleased.

Springfield, Mo., Nov. 18 (U.P.).—Ozark's apple growers generally are satisfied with the situation this year. To date there have been more than 225 carloads of apples shipped out of the territory. This year much of the early crop was hauled to market by motor trucks, and 235,000 bushels are in storage at Missouri Ozark points.

Wool Market.

Boston, Nov. 18 (A.P.) (U. S. Department of Agriculture).—Domestic wools at Boston have sold in the past week more freely than at any time since the first week in October. Early in the week prices were within ranges prevailing since the last sizable movement of wool in October. In the past two days prices have shown a strengthening tendency and recent sales have been mostly on the high side of price ranges. The largest sales were on 58s, 60s, ½ blood and finer Western wools, although some demand was received on lower grades of Territory wools and on 56s, ⅜ blood and finer fleeces.

Rubber Closes Quiet.

New York, Nov. 18 (A.P.).—Crude rubber futures closed quiet, 10@21 higher. December, 8.90; January, 9.08†; March, 9.43@9.45; May, 9.71. Smoked ribbed, spot, closed 8.75†.

Berlin—Owing to more favorable economic reports, the boerse continued a firm tendency throughout the session with prices improving.

Paris—Traders on the bourse were cautious awaiting developments. Oil and rubber shares improved. International issues were weaker and rentes held steady. The closing was irregular.

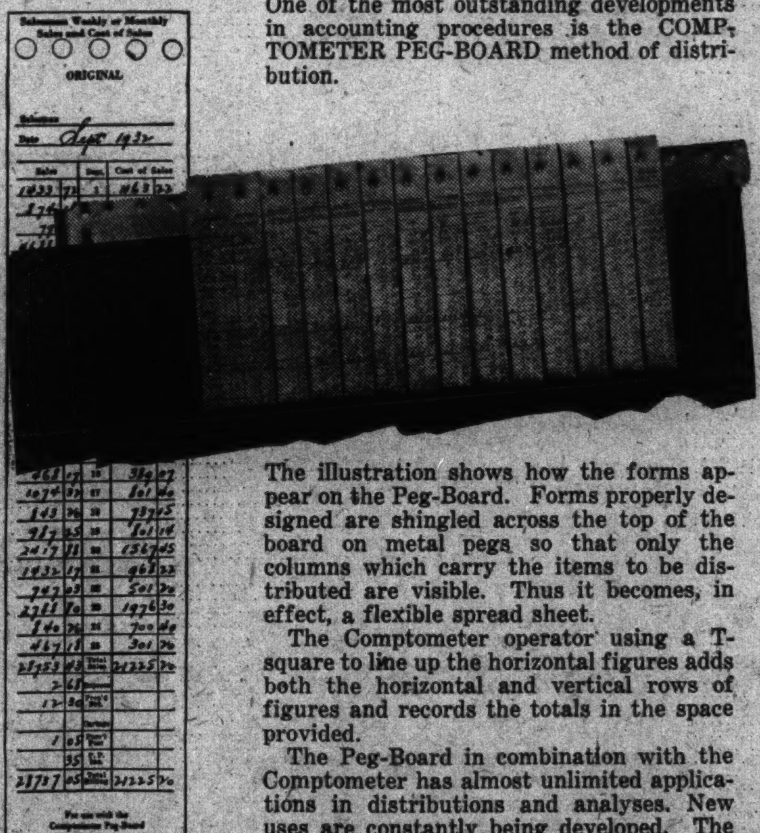
COMPTOMETER PEG-BOARD METHOD OF ACCOUNTING

One of the most outstanding developments in accounting procedures is the COMPTOMETER PEG-BOARD method of distribution.



Salesmen Weekly or Monthly Sales and Cost of Sales
ORIGINAL
For use with the Comptometer Peg-Board

A Connecticut wholesaler with 50 salesmen handling 34 products in 48 States, is analyzing sales by salesmen, territories and products, according to profit per item, total sales and quantities. This information is taken direct from 300 invoices made out daily. The entire sales analysis is handled by two clerks, each using a Comptometer and Peg-Board. This is not an exceptional case.

The illustration shows how the forms appear on the Peg-Board. Forms properly designed are shingled across the top of the board on metal pegs so that only the columns which carry the items to be distributed are visible. Thus it becomes, in effect, a flexible spread sheet.

The Comptometer operator using a T-square to line up the horizontal figures adds both the horizontal and vertical rows of figures and records the totals in the space provided.

The Peg-Board in combination with the Comptometer has almost unlimited applications in distributions and analyses. New uses are constantly being developed. The most common distributions, however, are represented by:

Sales Material
Payroll Expense
Cost Incoming Orders
Stock Control

GEO. D. LANE
Phone DIst. 0503 Munsey Building

Advantages..

- Figures taken direct from the originating point are used to produce final results.
- Eliminates repeated copying of figures for various breakdowns.
- Provides information in time for prompt executive action.
- Its flexibility permits wide variations in the number, size and kind of breakdowns and distributions . . . many clerks can work together to produce timely figures.
- Accuracy is assured as the use of original figures eliminates errors due to posting . . . once figures are correctly classified on the Peg-Board forms it is impossible to obtain an incorrect classification.
- Saves expense of special machines or elaborate equipment. The Comptometer Peg-Board does the entire job the low cost way.

Exclusive Features

The Comptometer Peg-Board, pioneered and developed by Felt & Tarrant Mfg. Co., has many exclusive features.

The metal strip to which the row of metal pegs is fastened, may be removed from the board and reversed without removing the forms from the pegs. This exclusive feature permits operating economies in that forms may be used containing figure information on the reverse side—otherwise, it would be necessary to remove the Peg-Board forms and reshingle.

Another exclusive feature is the locking clamp attached to the head of the slotted T-square whereby the square is held firmly in true alignment while the operator adds across for totals. After adding a column of figures, the operator simply releases the lock, slides the square down one space and adds across for the next total.

NOTE: MR. WM. F. SIMS, Director of Research and Methods for FELT AND TARRANT MFG. CO., Chicago, will give an illustrated talk on "GETTING ESSENTIAL COST STATISTICS," Monday, Nov. 20th at 7:45 P. M. at the Mayflower Hotel under the auspices of THE WASHINGTON CHAPTER OF NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF COST ACCOUNTANTS. Visitors cordially invited.

Wheat Sinks On Report of Dollar Stand

Stabilization Views Held Responsible for Fall; All Grains Lose.

Chicago, Nov. 18 (AP).—Wheat tumbled almost 3 cents today, influenced by trade reports that no stabilization of the dollar would be attempted based on the price of gold.

Downturns of wheat values were in disregard of unofficial explanations that the gold value of the dollar would not be permanently fixed until commodity prices were at a level which satisfied the Washington Administration.

Stop-loss selling of wheat developed, and lowest prices both of the day and the week were reached just at the last.

Wheat Closes Unsteady.

Wheat closed unsteady, 2⅜ to 2⅞ under yesterday's finish; corn, 1⅛ to 1½ down; oats, ¾ to 1 cent off, and provisions varying from 12 cents decline to a rise of 17 cents.

Attention of wheat traders focused increasingly on statements credited to an authoritative unofficial source that all talk of stabilization of the dollar merely because gold had reached a certain figure could be cast aside.

The statements suggested that any effort to stabilize the dollar on the basis of a definite gold price without relation to commodity prices might be attended by a violent slump. From the outset, the market showed itself bearishly affected by uncertainties of the monetary outlook, with traders taking special notice that Washington quotations on gold were unaltered and that sterling exhibited some decline.

Advances of Wheat.

Temporary advances of wheat to a fraction above yesterday's finish were simultaneous with reports of an address at Savannah by President Roosevelt ridiculing persons who would divide up all the money in the nation on a per capita basis every Saturday night, or who would rather possess pounds or francs.

Increased selling on price gains, however, led soon to sharper and sharper downturns, with the market bare of any aggressive support. Diplomatic recognition of Russia was apparently altogether devoid of any grain market influence.

Corn and oats were dragged down by wheat action and by reports which indicated rapid progress of corn-husking. Provisions averaged higher, influenced by relative firmness of the hog market and by expected good-sized lard purchase orders from Russia in the near future.

Copper Future Brightens as Stocks Dwindle

New York, Nov. 18 (AP).—The large domestic copper stocks which for 2 years have stood in the way of American mining companies making profits, are disappearing under accelerated European buying and increased consumption at home.

Supplies in the United States, which were built up to a peak of 700,000 tons during the past 3 years have dwindled to approximately 525,000 tons, a survey indicated today.

Exchange Rise Pleases.

Copper men are one group enthuiastic over the recent rise in foreign currencies in relation to the dollar for a high pound sterling, German mark or French franc makes it profitable for foreign buyers to take American copper in preference to metal at home.

Conditions within the industry are said to remain somewhat unsettled, but experts report some progress on working out a copper code that will win approval of all the industry and slowly rising prices are placing some low cost producers in the most favorable position they have occupied for a number of years.

Ten-Cent Metal.

Producers pin their hopes on "10-cent metal," but many believe that if the current level of around 8¼ cents a pound prevails until American stocks are lowered they may be able to show a small profit due to reduced costs. A year ago copper was selling around 5 cents a pound.

Since April domestic copper shipments have exceeded production and as foreign supplies are believed small, a further drain on oppressing inventories is looked for. Efforts of the pickup in the automobile industry has been felt in increased orders and from the public utility field copper men say have come reports that major power companies are planning to expand facilities, thereby creating a new outlet for thousands of miles of copper wire.

Silver Prices Close 100 Points Net Higher

New York, Nov. 18 (AP).—The silver market was erratic and a generally mixed trend prevailed today. After advancing around 150 points, the futures market sold off 40 to 70 points from the high, rallied 10 to 15 points and steadied around 100 points net advance.

Bar metal was quoted at 43⅝ cents an ounce, a net decline of 3¼ cents.

Real Estate Board Attacks 'Double Billing'

Offers Help to Utilities Group to Stamp Out Unfair Charges.

Cooperation on the part of the Washington Real Estate Board with the Public Utilities Commission in eliminating the unfair practice of "double billing" was offered again last week by Executive Secretary Charles J. Rush, upon receipt of the following communication from James C. Martin, executive secretary of the Public Utilities Commission.

"The Public Utilities Commission has received from Mr. James Ring, its rent survey research assistant, a recommendation that the Washington Real Estate Board be requested to cooperate in stamping out the unfair and dishonest practice known as 'double billing.'

"Mr. Ring has called to our attention section 3 of the code of ethics of your board, which provides that 'brokers should not accept commission on cost of repairs or other expenses in connection with properties under their control without the knowledge and consent of the owner.'

"Mr. Ring has assured the commission that through frequent conversations with owners and agents of rental property he has been informed that agents have accepted such commissions without knowledge of the owner, to the extent that in a number of cases the owner has removed from the agent the control of repairs. The commission is interested in this subject because of its undoubted relationship to prevailing rents in Washington, and asks the board to exert its best efforts to inform the property owners of Washington of the financial hazards involved in this practice.

Complaints Invited.

"The commission is gratified to know that the Washington Real Estate Board is opposed to such dealings except in cases where the owner is informed and has given his approval.

"The commission will be glad to receive from the board any information or comment it may desire to present concerning 'double billing,' including data on any specific cases that may be called to the attention of the board."

The Washington Real Estate Board calls attention to the fact that its code of ethics prohibits any member from indulging in this practice, even if he were so inclined. Secretary Rush also suggested that if the commission had any knowledge of violations on the part of any member of the Washington Real Estate Board it is requested that this information be transmitted to the board so that it may take proper action in upholding its code of ethics.

Mr. Rush said the board for years has fought for a high standard of business practice between the public and the real estate brokers of the District, and has consistently frowned upon any method or scheme that would lower the high ethical standards of the business.

Asked Congress Action.

In its efforts to stamp out unfair and unethical practices, it was added, the board has appeared before Congress over more than ten years urging the adoption of a real estate license law which would make it possible for the District officials to revoke the license of any real estate operator who indulged in such practice. During the special session of the Seventy-third Congress a real estate license law was introduced by Senator King, chairman of the Senate District Committee, and the board advised Senator King that it indorses this legislation.

Adoption of a real estate license law for the District based upon the MacChesney act, which has been prepared by counsel of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, would give ample protection to prospective real estate purchasers and would enforce the standards of practice demanded by the board as set forth in its code of ethics, it was added.

Auto Output Is Expected to Mount in '34

New York, Nov. 18.—If automobile prices are not advanced in 1934 the motor output in 1934 should be larger than in 1933, says the Alexander Hamilton Institute in its current bulletin, which points out that the output this year will total approximately 1,900,000 cars as compared with 1,371,000 in 1932 and 5,358,000 in 1929.

"Despite the rise in the general commodity price level," says the Institute, "automobile prices have shown no change since April when they reached the low for the depresesion, 19.4 per cent below the 1929 peak. This has resulted in the sale of a greater number of automobiles this year than would otherwise have been the case. If this policy is adhered to next year, the output in 1934 should be larger than in 1933 because the prospect is that the Nation's money income will show a further gain providing that the Government's various experiments do not seriously impede the natural recovery which now appears to be in progress. If automobile prices are raised, price increases rather than a gain in output will absorb the prospective expansion in the Nation's money income.

"Higher labor and material costs suggest the possibility of an advance in automobile prices. At the same time, there is a chance that the industry can absorb the higher costs in view of the fact that automobile prices during the depression showed less of a drop than the general commodity price level. From the peak in 1929 to the low point in 1932, the drop in the general price level amounted to 38.0 per cent as compared with the drop of only 19.4 per cent in automobile prices. Notwithstanding the rise in the general price level since February, automobile prices are still relatively high. In September, the general price level was still 26.6 per cent below the 1929 peak as compared with the 19.4 per cent decrease in automobile prices. Moreover, automobile prices in 1929 were higher than conditions warranted. The failure of automobile prices to undergo greater deflation during the depression was an important factor accounting for the severe drop in production from 1929 to 1932."

Tobacco Crop Brings Danville $2,325,919

Danville, Va., Nov. 18 (Spl.)—The sales of tobacco on the Danville tobacco market haye since October resulted in the distribution of nearly $2,500,000 among the growers of this section.

Statistics for the market issued today show the sale of 14,204,785 pounds for $2,325,919.63 at an average price of $16.38.

The week's sales saw an average of $18.72 per hundred pounds.

Competition for the cigarette types continues to be unusually keen with orders for foreign account due to the low value of the dollar abroad which makes it possible to buy more leaf with foreign currency is partly responsible for this condition.

Extra Dividend Is Declared By Colt's Arms

Walgreen Company Nets $1,820,483 During Fiscal Year.

Hartford, Conn., Nov. 18 (AP).—An extra dividend of 25 cents a share has been voted by directors of the Colt's Patent Fire Arms Manufacturing Co. in addition to the regular quarterly dividend of 25 cents. The two dividends bring the total payments to shareholders for the year to $1.25 a share.

In addition, the directors voted a bonus to employes of 2 per cent of their salaries. About 1,500 persons will receive approximately $35,000.

New York, Nov. 18 (AP).—Walgreen Co. and subsidiaries report net profit of $1,820,483 for the fiscal year ended September 30, equal to $2.40 a common share. This compares with $1,663,198 or $1.74 a common share in the previous year. Net sales totaled $46,026,125 against $47,612,220.

Hecla Mining Co. had profit of $156,980 before Federal taxes in the nine months ended September 30, against $29,270 a year ago.

Austin Nichols and Co. had net profit of $76,838 in the six months ended October 31, compared with net loss of $57,060 for the same period of 1932.

Directors of Commercial Investment Trust Corporation have declared the regular quarterly dividend of 50 cents per share on the common stock, payable January 1, 1934, to stockholders of record December 5, 1933.

The usual quarterly dividend on the convertible preference stock, optional series of 1929, also has been declared at the rate of 1-52 on one share of common stock, or, at the option of the holder, in cash at the rate of $1.50 for each convertible preference share. This dividend is also payable January 1, 1934, to stockholders of record December 5.

Chicago, Nov. 18 (AP).—The directors of Armour & Co. of Illinois took no action today regarding dividend payments on preferred stock, because, they announced, a new Illinois law forbids payments of dividends unless the company's net assets exceed its stated capital both before and after payment.

The announcement said preliminary estimates indicated the consolidated net earnings would be equal to about one year's preferred dividend requirements of Armour & Co. of Illinois and Armour & Co. of Deleware, but that a final auditing had not been made for the fiscal year ended October 28.

Cotton Prices Turn Quiet on Trade Sales

December Closes at 9.97 as Market Nets 2 Points Down to 3 Up.

New York, Nov. 18 (AP).—Cotton traders evidently found little of a stimulating character in today's news and business was quiet.

After selling up to 10.29 early, march reacted to 10.16 under liquidation and scattered selling, but recovered to 10.22, the general market closed steady, net 2 points lower to 3 points higher.

There was some buying on relatively steady Liverpool cables but it was offset by liquidation and some overnight selling orders from the South. Offerings were light, however, and market was steady throughout the session. Closing prices showed rallies of 3 to 8 points from the lowest.

Russian recognition appeared to have been expected and hopeful views of that development evidently found little reflection in today's trading. Except for the further December liquidation which was absorbed by the trade at slightly wider differences, business was attributed largely to evening up. Neither southern selling nor trade buying was particularly in evidence, while speculative sentiment was said to be confused by recent conflicting rumors with reference to the possibilities of stabilization or other monetary developments.

The amount of cotton on shipboard awaiting clearance at U. S. ports was estimated at 175,000 bales against 150,000 last year.

Higher Rubber Prices Loom In Java Parley

Session Opening at Batavia Wednesday May Add New Restrictions.

New York, Nov. 18.—With the conference of governors of all the rubber producing territories scheduled to be held in Batavia, Java, Wednesday, November 22, there is considerable discussion in rubber trade circles as to what may be the result of the conference which, among other things, is expected to take a stand with respect to some form of restriction.

Not only have imports into the United States advanced, showing more or less steady increase since the first of the year, but consumption has more than kept pace with the increased shipments and prices have shown a rising tendency.

Statistics of Commodity Exchange, Inc., show that since March, when stocks of rubber in the United States totaled 390,499 tons, the domestic supply has decreased to 334,637 tons up to October 1, or a drop of approximately 15 per cent. This reduction in our stocks has been due in large part to the expansion in rubber consumption, particularly in the three months ended September 30, when the consumption in the United States was 130,809 tons, compared with 77,544 tons in the corresponding period in 1932, or an increase in consumption of approximately 70 per cent.

The fact that consumption has outdistanced stocks by so large a margin in the current year indicates to the trade that the peak of supply has been reached, at least for the time being. This is reflected in the price range of rubber futures on Commodity Exchange since January.

The current price level is below the previous low price just before restriction went into effect in 1922 under the Stevenson restriction plan, which plan was abolished four years later. At that time, 11 years ago, rubber began sky-rocketing as the closing months of 1922 drew near and this commodity, which had sold as low as 12 cents per pound for the standard grade, soared, reaching a peak finally of $1.23 per pound. In this connection, Bankers Economic Service, in a survey just prepared, says:

"After months of negotiating between the nationals which control the vast bulk of the world's rubber production, an important announcement is in the offing. The conference at Batavia, it is understood, will deal with the 'native' rubber question, the principal stumbling block on which Dutch and British interests are divided. In rubber circles it is thought that a most desirable method applicable to 'native' production is the imposition of an export tax on this production.

"But, whether the plan be a straight restriction scheme embracing all the rubber growing areas in the Far East or restriction applicable to the plantation areas and an export tax on 'native' output, it is evident that either method or both spell high rubber prices for the future."

Cooperative action by the Dutch and British by a restriction of as little as 25 per cent would reduce visibles in a short space of time by around 175,000 tons, says this survey.

The survey further says that in the long run the value of rubber is, to an extent, influenced by the price of silver, in addition to the factors of supply and demand.

The possibility of restriction or an export tax exists notwithstanding the fact that consumption is greater than current production. The Commodity Review of J. S. Bache & Co. points out that during the first nine months of 1933 consumption was equal to that for the whole of 1932. The largest proportion of the world's visibles is in the United States at present.

Bank Clearings Of Week Drop 2.8 Per Cent

New York, Nov. 18.—Some losses appear in bank clearings this week. The total for all leading cities in the United States, as reported by Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., of $4,313,100,000 was 6.7 per cent above that for the same week of last year. At New York City, clearings were $3,020,009,000, an increase of 11.9 per cent, while the aggregate for centers outside of New York of $1,293,091,000 showed a decline of 2.8 per cent.

The increase was largely at New York. Armistice Day was observed at a number of points and clearings there covered only five business days. Eleven of the twenty outside cities report an increase, but it is generally small. These include Boston, Pittsburgh, Chicago, St. Louis, Minneapolis, Omaha, Richmond, Atlanta, Dallas, San Francisco and Portland. Declines at Baltimore and Cleveland were again quite heavy, and the reduction this week was also somewhat larger at Philadelphia. This week's clearings exceed those for the five days of last week by $110,954,000; a year ago the increase was $648,126,000.

Figures for leading centers, compared with those of last year, are printed herewith; also, daily bank clearings for the year to date:

VISCOUNT KIKUJIRO ISHII.

West Fears Japan's Trade, Ishii Declares

Leader Says Business Is Dreaded More Than Tokyo's Arms.

By Glenn Babb.

Tokyo, Nov. 18 (AP).—The Occident fears the rising tide of cheaply manufactured Japanese armaments, Viscount Kikujiro Ishii, Japan's chief delegate to the World Economic Conference at London, told commercial leaders here when he returned from a tour of the world.

Anxiety over Japanese trade competition was first impressed on him, Viscount Ishii said, in his talks with President Roosevelt in Washington late in May.

"Sneakers" Intrigue Roosevelt.

"When I went to the United States and England," Ishii told the economic federation, "I was prepared to hear much criticism of Japan's military operations in Manchuria and North China. Instead I was greeted on all sides by complaints of Japanese trade competition.

"When I met President Roosevelt in Washington, among the first topics he broached was Japan's export of rubber-soled shoes to the United States. In London Ramsay MacDonald asked me almost the same questions.

American Ban Recalled.

"I was astonished by the interest these statesmen took in such a comparatively small matter."

That the President's interest in Japanese tennis shoes was not idle curiosity was proved in September, when the Treasury Department issued regulations to halt imports of such shoes, along with Japan-made incandescent lamps, which were being delivered in the United States at prices about 50 per cent of those for American makes. A few weeks later American sporting goods manufacturers were asking protection against Japanese baseballs and tennis balls.

U. S. Feels Competition.

American industry, however, is feeling the Japanese competition in only a mild way as compared with manufacturers of Great Britain.

Japan's exports of rubber shoes and lamps to the United States are measured only in hundreds of thousands of dollars annually, whereas the British cotton textile industry, the worst sufferer, is losing to the Japanese, world markets worth scores of millions of pounds sterling.

The threat against the very life of Great Britain's oldest major industry is being pushed by the most efficient and powerful industry of Japan.

U. S. Dollar Drops On Foreign Marts

New York, Nov. 18 (AP).—Despite reports of currency stabilization moves and the fact that the domestic gold price for the fifth day was permitted to remain at $33.56 an ounce, the dollar sagged today in foreign exchange dealings.

The British pound rallied to around $5.27, up about 7 cents, reacted and recovered again to close at $5.24¾ for a net gain of 4¾ cents. The French franc followed sterling with a gain of about .07 of a cent, but finished up .04½ of a cent at 6.35½ cents. Dutch guilders firmed .48 of a cent at 65.50 cents. Belgian belgas and Swiss francs were up .16 and .22 of a cent, respectievly, and Canadian dollars advanced 3-16 of a cent to 102.18¾ cents. German marks, the Scandinavians and Japanese yen were moderately higher.

Dealers reported that transactions were relatively small and the market thin.

Business Is Driven Forward By Increase in Retail Buying

Stocks Start to Move as Holiday Trade Opens; Emphasis Is Shown in Novelty Lines; Christmas Savings Expected to Boost Activity.

By Dun & Bradstreet, Inc.

New York, Nov. 18.—The entire trade picture has been changed almost completely by the momentum gained in retail distribution, following the vigorous forward movement which started a week earlier.

As the cold weather extended to nearly all parts of the country, and was accompanied in many sections by heavy snowfall, the largest sales for the season were recorded in a majority of the cities reporting.

Stocks, which had remained static since September, started to move at an accelerated pace, with the complete clearance of many of the most popular grades placing unexpected calls on wholesalers and even manufacturers for fill-in requirements.

Shopping Aids Stores.

In addition to the influence of auspicious weather, the substantial headway already made by Christmas shopping has engendered activity in departments aside from those identified with the provision of heavy apparel and winter merchandise.

The trend thus far in gift buying shows more emphasis on novelty and luxury items than a year ago, although a more comprehensive appraisal of the extent of Christmas demand will not be possible for another week, when the full impetus of the distribution of approximately $400,000,000 to some 8,000,000 members of Christmas savings clubs will commence to make its influence felt. To this amount has been added nearly $100,000,000 in dividend payments by closed banks during the week and the prospect of at least as much more during the next ten days, the bulk of which will disappear almost immediately into the tills of retailers.

Distributors Are Cheerful.

The increasing cheerfulness of distributors of merchandise, as the season of holiday buying approaches, finds a counterpart in other branches of trade where the prospects are becoming certain of an early extension of employment totals, which have displayed a sagging tendency for more than a month.

In addition to the Administration's plan to put 4,000,000 men into gainful occupations on civil works projects by the middle of December, the wider schedules about to be inaugurated by several industries, to take care of the accumulation of spring orders, will more than tighten the lag in employment which has developed during the between-season lull.

There has been a broadening spread in the helpfulness emanating from the NRA, as the quicker disposal of codes is causing less delay in manufacturing operation, and obtruse interpretations of the provisions of some of those already adopted have been straightened satisfactorily, permitting prograss to be resumed. The critical opposition of a number of industries to the NRA procedure gradually is being turned into whole-hearted support.

Slow-up in Prices.

The sustained rise of commodity prices has lessened the tension in country districts, where the strikes of farmers already have lost much of their retardative influence on trade progress. In the grape-growing States, activity in the wine industry predominates, with orders piling up and benefits spreading to all allied trades.

Leases for business properties as well as sales of real estate are multiplying rapidly, as demand for suitable locations for beverage establishments has become insistent, and in some cities has reduced store vacancies to a minimum. New plants for distillers are springing up rapidly, with shipments of equipment trailing orders.

There has been no diminution in the demand for beer bottles, with shipments still many weeks late, and the deluge of orders received for whisky flasks, in anticipation of December 5, has made it necessary for many glass factories to augment working forces.

Trends Resume Climb.

The trend of industrial indices, the recession in several of which was checked last week, now has resumed an upward course.

Halting a decline of four weeks' duration, there was a rise of 1.9 per cent in the rate of steel production, while the percentage of gain in electric output was nearly double last week's, contrasting with a decrease at this time a year ago, and making the twenty-eighth successive week that production has been above the comparative periods of 1932.

New orders received by lumber mills were the largest in four weeks, but production receded to the May level, and shipments were lower. While freight carloadings continue substantially in excess of the comparative period of a year ago, there was a decline from the figures of a week earlier, in spite of the increase in bituminous coal output. Due to the almost continuous rise from the end of April to the beginning of September, total production of bituminous coal for the year is higher than the 1932 figures.

Italians Find New Process For Citric Acid

A process for obtaining citric acid direct from lemon juice rather than through the intermediary of citrate of lime, is said to have been successfully evolved in Italy, according to Trade Commissioner E. Humes, Rome, in a report to the Commerce Department.

Development of the new process, it is pointed out, is designed to meet the growing competition of citric acid produced as a result of a special process of sugar fermentation.

During the past few years, the report shows, the citric acid monopoly formerly enjoyed by Italy has been broken as a result of increased production of fermentation citric acid. This type is now being produced on a commercial basis in at least four countries—the United States, United Kingdom, Czechoslovakia and Belgium. The Italian citric acid industry is dominated by one large organization which also has a controlling interest in a Belgian company, the latter being one of the three largest producers of fermentation citric acid.

Production of citrate of lime and citric acid in the United States has markedly increased in recent years and the American product has assumed a position of major importance in world markets.

If the new method of producing citric acid in Italy proves practicable and the intermediate process is scrapped, Italian production of citrate of lime will no doubt automatically disappear, it is pointed out. The Italian government is now apparently awaiting the outcome of the new departure in citric acid manufacture before undertaking the reorganization of the country's entire citrus industry.

Wool Prices Rise 20 Points During Week

New York, Nov. 18.—Prices of wool top futures on the New York Wool Top Exchange registered advances of 20 to 27 points during the past week. Business was better than it has been in some time and, especially toward the latter part of the week, demand for tops increased considerably. Trading was fairly well distributed over the winter and spring months.

Spot tops at Boston advanced 5 points during the week, from 109.5 to 110 cents. Business in that market continued very dull, although there was some slight improvement apparent toward the end of the week. While business in wool was equally scarce in the earlier part of the week, some fairly good sales in fine and half-blood grades of both territory and fleece wools were made in the last two days. Prices on wool were very strong, and showed a decided upward tendency.

Futures abroad closed the week at somewhat higher levels. Prices at Antwerp were unchanged to up a quarter of a penny, and at Roubaix up 60 to 70 centimes. Bradford spot quotations were up a quarter to one and three-quarters pennies.

Following is a summary of quotations on the New York Wool Top Exchange for the week ended Friday:

Chinese Buy More Pencils in Germany

In the face of the keenest competition from Japan, Germany was able to double pencil sales to China in the first eight months of the current year, compared with the eight-month period of 1932, according to a report from Vice Consul C. T. Zawadzki, Berlin, made public by the Commerce Department.

Total German pencil shipments to the Chinese market in the 1933 period, the reprot shows, amounted to approximately 20,000,000 pieces. China, England and British India are the three largest foreign outlets for this German product.

Other countries which increased their purchases of German pencils in 1933 as compared with last year were Argentina and Spain.

During the first eight months of the current year Germany exported a total of 241,000,000 pencils, compared with 226,000,000 during the corresponding period of 1932.

Russia Makes Progress in Heavy Industry

Auto Manufacture Leads Advance; Year's Gain Is 9.6 Per Cent.

Moscow, Nov. 18 (U.P.).—A considerable increase in the average productivity per worker and the fine showing of the automotive industry are the chief favorable developments in the first nine months of this year in the Soviet Union's heavy industry, complete figures just published indicate.

Heavy industry showed an output of 9.6 per cent above the same months a year ago. That is substantially below the plan, but the increase was achieved despite the dismissal of tens of thousands of workers.

In specific terms, productivity of labor increased over 14 per cent over last year. Since the output per worker will, in the long run, determine the success of Soviet industrialization, this showing has been greeted with satisfaction in economic circles.

In the automotive industry the output per worker grew by more than 50 per cent. This may be taken to mean that the large mass production plants, like Stalingrad Tractor and Gorki Automobile factories, are learning to use modern equipment and system more efficiently.

This industry for the nine months fulfilled the plan by over 80 per cent, thus assuring over-fulfillment of the annual schedule for tractors and automobiles.

Heavy industry as a whole, it is now evident, will be far below official expectations. The 9.6 per cent growth compares with 21 per cent set as the goal for the year. The final quarter of the year always is a difficult one. Winter weather interferes seriously with the output of coal, iron and steel. There is small reason to believe, therefore, that the margin can be made up by the end of the year.

Shipments of American Apples to England Drop

Winchester, Va., Nov. 18 (Spl.). A decrease in the shipment of American apples to British markets during the past week was shown by cable reports from the foreign auction blocks reaching here today. Although there was a decline in the volume of shipments, demand for American fruit continued good, the report disclosed.

Shipments for the week were: Liverpool, 1,715 barrels; 1,415 boxes. London, 2,031 barrels and 1,572 boxes. Hull, 2,348 barrels and 4,538 boxes. Southampton, 746 barrels and 1,512 boxes. Newcastle, 613 barrels. Total, 7,453 barrels and 8,977 boxes.

Accomac County Ranks 31st in Onion Output

Richmond, Va., Nov. 18 (AP).—Accomac County, Va., ranked thirty-first among all counties of the country in dry-onion production according to acreage harvested in 1930, Census Bureau statistics showed today.

Accomac, with 703 acres harvested, was the only Virginia county to rank among the first 50 counties of the United States in acreage of this product. With a production value of $95,962, however, the county dropped to forty-first ranking place among the counties.

Bavarian Dies With Ludwig Secret Intact

Death of "Mad Ruler" and Physician in Lake Sealed Mystery.

Starnberg, Bavaria, Nov. 18 (AP). A man who might have made a fortune had he chosen to disclose what he knew about the tragic death of Ludwig II, the mad King of Bavaria, has died at 69 without breaking his self-imposed oath of silence.

Jacob Liedl, a fisherman and former burgomaster of the nearby village of Aufkirchen, was 22 years old when he discovered the king's body in a shallow part of Starnberg Lake, together with the body of the royal physician, Dr. Von Gudden.

The "crazy king's" career—his exaggerated cult of beauty; his palaces, built regardless of expense in imitation of Louis XIV of France; his friendship with Richard Wagner, the composer, and finally his deposition on grounds of incurable insanity, are matters of history.

Death by Drowning.

The king was conveyed under escort to the castle of Berg on Starnberg Lake, June 12, 1886. The next day, Whit Sunday, he met his death by drowning, together with Dr. Von Gudden, the mental specialist, who had unwisely gone for a walk alone with his patient, whose physical strength was enormous.

Full details of the event never were revealed, there having been no eye-witnesses.

Fishermen of Starnberg were summoned to search the lake, and it was Liedl who located Ludwig's body. He also found footprints in the shallow lake bottom. That a struggle had taken place was evident from scratches on Dr. Von Gudden's face.

Carrier to King.

Liedl had the king's personal confidence—he often acted as special courier between his master and the latter's beautiful cousin, Empress Elizabeth of Austria. Thus, he considered himself in honor bound to secrecy regarding the circumstances surrounding the king's death and year after year rejected many tempting offers to tell his story in full.

Liedl was universally respected, and famous for his life-saving. He rescued no fewer than 66 persons from drowning at the peril of his own life from the waters of the lake.

He was decorated for his prowess and the "Praesentier March" was played over his grave—the grave of the last survivor of those closely connected with the end of the royal drama.

Whelan represent the accused.

Scholar Plans Report on Us To Future Age

Will Leave Records for Savants to Find in Million Years.

Cleveland, Nov. 18 (AP).—If present-day civilization should perish from the earth, Dr. Robert C. Binkley will have made sure beforehand that the scientist who discovers us a million years from now will know all about American installment buying in the year 1933.

Dr. Binkley, professor of history at Western Reserve University, has established a bureau on materials for research. He is studying ways of preserving evidences of current culture for future generations.

Wants Our Heirs to Understand.

Supposing, he said, some happening would end our civilization? or, less tremendous in its scope, supposing something would only change it, like the inroad of another ice age, such as created the Great Lakes? Then students at a future day would deserve to have at their finger tips actual evidence of what went on in the world in the dim and misty past.

"We of the present," said Dr. Binkley, "want to be understood by our progeny many, many generations removed.

"Adoption of the NRA," he commented on current things, "raises at once a problem for study. It is essential that complete records be preserved in lasting form which will tell the story of industry before the adoption of the codes."

Asks Provision for Future.

An appropriation from the American Council of Learned Societies and the Social Science Research Council is financing the work.

Dr. Binkley is chairman of the joint committee on materials for research. Up to the moment, he said, scholars have been concerned principally with focusing their eyes on the past, both far distant and immediate; now they will be asked to help in looking to a future when man can be guided more accurately by a lamp of experience lighted by his forbears.

Woman's Relief Corps Visited by Inspector

This having been selected as the date for the yearly inspection, Mrs. Mary Bowen, inspector for the Department of the Potomac, was introduced; also the department president, Mrs. Anna Horn, and her staff, and Mrs. Delia O'Brien, chairman of the executive board of the National Woman's Relief Corps. Each gave a short talk.

Mrs. Cora W. Dorsey was initiated into membership.

A dinner and bazaar will be held at the Odd Fellows Hall, 419 Seventh street northwest, December 13.

Mrs. Lida Oldroyd donated a quilt for the benefit of the corps. The next meeting will be held December 7.

Radio Waves and Ripples

"PROBABLY no form of radio entertainment is more lacking in technical development than drama."

We heard that somewhere the other day, and, not knowing what it meant, hurried right over to see Ronald Dawson, the capital's principal—if not solitary—radio "playwright-producer.

It seems that it means just what it says. But we were so used to people saying one thing and meaning another that we couldn't be sure.

From what Dawson said, we understood that very little distinction is being made between writing plays for radio and writing them for stage or movie production. That's what's the matter with most of the pieces written for the air. The playwright can't remember that he has but one medium of dramatic expression—sound—and goes right ahead in the same old rut just as though he were writing for Hollywood or Broadway.

Dawson says that won't do. That's just what we had been telling ourself, "It won't do."

So far Dawson has been able to develop but one rule for radio playmaking: "Tell all that you possibly can in the dialogue."

An up-and-coming young tenor is the gentleman, Bert Bagranoff. The lady is Irene Beasley, who also sings. Both are N. B. C. performers, Bagranoff on Capital air lanes, Miss Beasley for the network.

"That should get you away from such clumsy stage-setting businesses as:

" 'We find Fred and Judy in the music room plotting to kill Uncle Ned for his insurance money. Fred nervously fumbles an axe.' "

As we hadn't any intention of writing a radio play ourself, we thought that was good enough.

Dawson was thrown into the radio play business quite by accident and so unexpectedly that he only had time to read a couple of books on the subject. WOL needed someone to lecture on radio dramas in connection with a script writing contest two years ago. Dawson was called on. It then occurred to him that he might as well write a play himself. He's been doing it ever since.

To date his total output stands at 153 manuscripts. He writes one every day or so, having a play-a-week contract with Radio Events, New York agency.

European radio listeners refuse to hear American jazz.

That may come as something of a shock after all that's been said about the popularity of American dance bands in Europe's capitals. But apparently European radio owners don't dance, for we have the statement on the authority of Max Jordan, whose business is arranging international broadcasts for N. B. C.

Jordan came to this country aboard the Graf Zeppelin. He was in the Capital last week conferring with the N. B. C. minds, presumably about more international broadcasts.

"Europeans have very little use for American music," Jordan said. "Borah, Ford and the President are the most popular American broadcasters."

Americans, on the other hand, appear to enjoy whatever is sent over to them, according to Jordan.

Every now and then something goes wrong with the hook-up. For instance, a description in German of the Roosevelt inaugural was switched into Paris instead of Berlin, making the French very angry.

The principal difficulty with international broadcasting, however, is the weather. Once Jordan had arranged to radio a Swiss yodeling contest to America. The program was fine. A champion lady yodeler yodeled and then a whole chorus of yodelers yodeled. But not a yodel was heard on this side. There was a bad storm somewhere.

Negro, Guilty In Killing, Gets Five-Year Term

Shakes Hands With Judge and Promises to Be Good Prisoner.

Lexington, Va., Nov. 18 (AP). After deliberating nearly two hours, a jury in Rockbridge County Circuit Court here Friday returned a verdict sentencing Samuel Carter, Brownsburg Negro, to five years in the State Penitentiary for voluntary manslaughter of Goodrich Whipple at the former's home the night of October 7.

The jury included C. D. Deacon, I. A. Wilhelm, Otho Nicely, J. E. Reid, J. B. Brown, Hugh Adams, J. M. Swink, S. H. Smith, Walter Wilson, L. L. Claytor, Graham Montgomery and S. A. Chittum.

In giving instructions to the jury, Judge Joseph A. Glasgow stressed that Carter's race should have no bearing on the verdict, and admonished the jury to decide the case upon evidence and not to allow hearsay, prejudice or the weight of public opinion to influence their decision.

Carter, who had been unemotional throughout the trial, smiled on hearing the verdict, shook hands with the judge and promised to "be a good prisoner."

STANLEY HORNER SAYS:
"When we recondition a used car, we never cut corners; we are not satisfied that a car merely runs well when sold; it must CONTINUE to satisfy over a period of time commensurate with its age and make.
Perhaps we are TOO particular in this respect, but ABSOLUTE ASSURANCE of perfect used-car performance is the result.

Hand Labor On Made Jobs Is Held Failure

Engineering Paper Tells of C. C. C. Disinterest in Vermont.

Engineering News-Record of November 9 contains an article dealing with the construction of large earth dams in Vermont, with labor recruited from the Civilian Conservation Corps. The experiences related in this article throw some light on the problems of "made" work.

Following the disastrous floods in Vermont in 1927, State and Federal engineers worked out plans for flood control. Up to the start of the depression it had not been found possible to finance this work, but when the Civilian Conservation Corps was organized an attempt was made to construct two large earth dams with labor available in the camps.

Work was put under the direction of Army engineers with civilian engineers in charge of construction details.

First Plan Cumbersome.

In the original set-up the Army officers who had charge of the camps retained supervision of the men. The official in charge of each company brought his men to the site and remained with them throughout the day. The civilian engineer and his superintendent laid out the work to be done. Their orders were transmitted through the camp commanders.

The set-up was cumbersome and unsatisfactory because the Army officers were not qualified as technical supervisors and the men plainly indicated they did not intend to overwork.

The work started with clearing and grubbing the dam sites, followed by removal of a large number of boulders and stripping the top soil.

Hand Labor Ineffective.

Hand labor at its best is very ineffective and under the conditions obtaining it was even less effective. Occasional groups worked with a will at heavy labor, such as hand-drilling boulders and removing large stumps with block and tackle, but the remainder of the companies "took it easy." Crews with shovels and wheelbarrows were spotted all over the site, but hardly any one worked. Wheelbarrow runners spent most of the time sitting on the handles of the barrows and talking. Despite frequent trips to each gang by a water boy, the men would go to the water wagon and line up for an hour at a time waiting for a drink. The difficulties were accentuated by the usual number of agitators.

Some Work With Will.

In a few cases more interesting work seemed to appeal to the crews. There was bettter progress as clearing extended into heavy forest cover, for this gave the workers a feeling of accomplishment. It also was noted that on a separate job below the sites of the dams, which consisted of drilling and blasting out rock ledges, the men had an attitude very different from that of the men on the dams.

Under this program of hand labor there was hardly any progress. The Army engineers finally introduced major equipment, such as air-compressors and rook drills, trucks and tractors. The phychological effect was excellent, for the men then seemed to feel they were working on a real job.

The next step was a readjustment of the organization made possible by the discharge and reemployment of the Civilian Conservation Corps workers October 1. Regular Army camp officers were given charge of the men only while in camp and not going to and from the job. When the men arrive at the work they are turned over to civilian foremen.

Troublemakers have been weeded out and competent foremen selected. This resulted in an increase of efficiency. It is estimated that about 75 per cent of the men are now trying to turn out a full day's work.

The lesson to be learned is that the problems of handling labor under the new deal are exactly the same as they were under the old order. Men work better when they are interested, and they are more interested when they are equipped with suitable apparatus.

Surplus Cotton Aids 5,465,000 Idle Families

Distribution of 844,063 Bales in Form of Garments Finished.

The American Red Cross has made final distribution of cotton clothing realized from 844,063 bales of Farm Board cotton voted by Congress to the Red Cross for distribution to the needy, it was announced yesterday.

The organization has shipped to its chapters and other units since August, 1932, the following: 102,224,822 yards of cotton cloth, 66,675,960 cotton garments, including sweaters, overalls, jumpers, underwear and hosiery; 2,627,788 blankets and comforters and 1,136,367 yards of sheeting.

It is estimated that the cotton cloth was converted into 35,000,000 garments by thousands of women volunteers. Distribution was made by 3,700 Red Cross chapters and their branches and through charitable agencies in cities and counties. These agencies reported to the Red Cross that 5,465,000 families needed clothing. The Red Cross estimated that each of these needy families received an average of more than 20 garments from the distribution.

"The cotton clothing was distributed in all but 23 of the Nation's counties," said Chairman John Barton Payne yesterday. "The magnitude of the task of converting the cotton and delivering it to the individual needy family in the community is illustrated by the fact that the Red Cross placed 283,000 shipping orders with the mills and garment factories. We made purchases of cloth and garments from 522 mills and factories.

"The Red Cross also distributed 85,000,000 bushels of wheat to needy families in all but six of the Nation's counties. The wheat went in the form of flour and bread. The first wheat product was shipped in March, 1932, and the last barrel had been consigned by the National Red Cross for the needy in June, 1933. There was distributed 10,688,000 barrels of flour to 5,803,000 families."

At the Chess Table

By Willard H. Mutchler.

Aside from the club championship tournament at the Capital City Chess Club and the general tournament in progress at the Federal Employes Chess Club, there exists a temporary lull in strictly public chess events locally. The next feature of public interest is to take place during the first week in December at the Jewish Community Center, where the well-known and popular United States champion, Frank J. Marshall, will then exhibit his skill at simultaneous play. Reservations for boards, for which a fee of $1 is charged, should be made immediately by telephoning I. S. Turover at District 6796 or writing him at 3909 Jocelyn street, northwest.

In the meantime, readers will be interested in perusing a game contested in Israel Horowitz's recent simultaneous exhibition at the center, in which the master player offered a draw to E. R. Shepard. On a recent visit to Philadelphia, Horowitz staged an exhibition game in competition against two nationally known Pennsylvania players. The consulting adversaries were Sydney T. Sharp and B. F. Winkleman, both of whom have held titles ranging from that of Mercantile and Franklin club champions to that of Pennsylvania State champion. The consultants, playing the white pieces, elected to invite complications in a King's Gambit Opening. Horowitz accepted their gambit, and later their resignation. For the annotations readers are indebted to I. S. Turover

Notes by I. S. Turover.

(a) Recommended by Bogoljubow. If 5 P—K5, P—Q4 with advantage for black.

(b) Tartakower claims that P—Q3 is preferable to Bogoljubow's continuation of P—Q4, as played in the text.

(c) And now it is black who conceives the idea of a gambit, and rightly so, as he gets full compensation in completed development of the open K file.

(d) R—Kch, at once, is more precise.

(e) The more natural K—B2 would be met by the not very obvious B—Kt5, threatening BxKt, followed by Kt—K5ch.

(f) B—Kt5 deserved consideration.

(g) Highly questionable, as the attack on the KKt file after the exchange is of but short duration, and insufficient compensation for the broken position of the pawns.

(h) Not K—Kt2, on account of R—K6.

(i) If instead 19 R—Q, KtxBch; 20 RxKt; 21 RxKtch, KxR; 22 Kt—B5ch, K—Q2; 23 KtxR, KxKt; 24 Q—R3ch winning a P with one attack.

(j) If BxR, QxPch—followed by KtxBP with a winning attack.

(k) Another brilliant continuation at this stage would be 21 . . . R—Kch; 22 BxR, Kt—B5ch; 23 K—B, Q—R3; 24 K—B2, Kt—R6ch, winning the queen.

(l) Losing outright, as black forcibly demonstrates. But there seems to be no adequate defense against black's numerous threats.

(m) If 27 BxR, QxBch, followed either by Q—Q6 mate or KtQ6ch, QxP and QxKtP mate. Again proving the futility of the King's Gambit.

Solutions to Problems.

The author's intended key to No. 554, two-mover by C. S. Kipping, was Kt—Kt8. Although it does the trick, solvers also found a second solution commencing with 1 Kt—Kt5ch. Among those sending in solutions were Jacob Frech, J. W. Harris, Glenn C. Russell, W. M. Sulzner and H. M. Ward.

Jacob Frech writes: "Problem No. 554 generates about 70,000 series. Its relevant syllogistic middle term is: A problem in which white can force one of the following only two alternative species of series of quickest forced mates: 1 Kt—Kt5; 2 Q—K4 or Q3 or B3 or R—Q3. Or 1 Kt—Kt8; 2 Q—K4 or R2 or B6 or R(B5)—K5 or Kt—Kt5 or P—K6 or Q6 or B6. 1 Kt—Kt5 generates only five distinct mate series, whereas 1 Kt—Kt8 generates more than 40 distinct mate series."

After weeks of chasing up the original record we now once more present that problem erroneously numbered No. 250, by P. H. Williams, about which so many solvers have been inquiring. It appears under its proper number, 252, today. The trouble was all caused, we discovered, by a misplaced black Kt. As published the Kt in question was located on QBsq; it should have been on KB8. Since the problem is really quite a pretty one, we give it here again in full.

Today's Yoke Is Easy.

Taken from The Christian Science Monitor.

When Christ Jesus, the Wayshower, gave to the multitudes his tended invitation, ending with the words, "My yoke is easy, and My burden is light," he well knew the condition of the people to whom his appeal was made. Whether from land or sea their harvests were won after arduous toil, the taxes of the Roman government made appropriate the simile "heavy laden," while the tasks of the people may have seemed to them like the yoke upon the necks of the laboring oxen.

The call of divine Love is ever welcome to the toiler; and here, as always, the tender words of the spiritually minded Master, touched a responsive chord. The tender invitation to take upon the shoulder of endeavor the yoke made easy by understanding, and so demonstrate the joy of right service, is the message of the eternal Christ, ever calling men to see and claim their true spiritual selfhood. In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, has revealed the availability of this truth in our day. She says (p. 332): "Jesus was born of Mary. Christ is the true idea voicing good, the divine message from God to men speaking to the human consciousness." On the following page she further says, "The divine image, idea, or Christ was, is, and ever will be inseparable from the divine Principle, God is Love. Then could Love, the Father of all, place upon His sons a chafing yoke, or load His children with "heavy burdens and grevious to be borne?"

In the measure of their spritual understanding students of Christian Science have applied this truth not only to sin and the problems of labor, but to the burdens of sickness, disease, poverty, sorrow and care. They are today proving that the teachings of the great Wayshower are built upon the Christ, Truth, that man is now the son of God; that he is the reflection of God, good, and is therefore forever at one with the Father. Thus, man in God's image and likeness, is perfect, eternal, and harmonious. Despite the seeming evidence of material sense to the contrary, the true man now and always expresses the qualities of God. Whatever is unlike the Father, despite its insistent claims or apparent importance, has neither reality nor power.

This was conclusively shown when Jesus told the Jews that they did the works of their father the devil (evil) who "abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him." He supported and proved His striking statements by striking works, such as healing all manner of sickness and overcoming all forms of evil, even to the raising of certain ones who had died. And Jesus Himself mastered death and came forth from the tomb; and later through still clearer spiritual understanding He disappeared from mortal vision, or, in scriptural language, was "carried up into heaven."

Christian Science is today revealing the illimitable joy and relief brought to men by the easy yoke of Truth. Mrs. Eddy illumines this in her statement (Science and Health, p. 494), "It is not well to imagine that Jesus demonstrated the divine power to heal only for a select number or for a limited period of time, since to all mankind and in every hour, divine Love supplies all good." Jesus proved in His life the applicability of the Christ, Truth, through which care and anxiety were displaced by a knowledge of God and man; assuredly Truth is eternal, and available now and always. Men therefore need not carry burdens to which mortal belief alone has condemned them.

Burdens are laid off as men change their thought from the supposed sovereignty of sin, sickness, sorrow, unemployment, or death, to the understanding that man is the image and likeness of the supreme and perfect God, good. Spiritual understanding is the eradicator of evil, and it snaps the thongs—fears—which hold a burden carried only in belief. With its disappearance, care gives place to gratitude, and we sing with the Psalmist, "O give thanks unto the Lord, for He is good; for His mercy endureth forever." Such a glimpse of spiritual fact, humbly and perseveringly followed toward greater understanding, enables men now to demonstrate freedom from the hard yoke of any discordant condition.

"There is no fear in love," said the beloved disciple. Man lives because God, Love, is Life. He thinks true thoughts because he reflects God, divine Mind. God having dominion, man reflects dominion Thus where God is, man is. It is therefore practical and joyful to realize that man is forever present with God. In Christian Science man "reflects spiritually all that belongs to his Maker" (ibid., p. 475). Man's sonship with God, his Father, is therefore inviolable. Sorrow, anxiety, and responsibility can never separate the child from the Father, nor can these things oppress where good is seen to be omnipresent. Thus the invitation of the Christ does not offer a vicarious carrying of our load, but shows that in the ever present realm of Truth and Love, God's man, His perfect likeness, is unburdened.

Vagrants' Need Of Care Cited

Georgetown Clinic List Shows Many Roamers Carry Disease.

Records of physical examinations of transient men and boys sent to the Georgetown University Hospital clinic reveal that many of these transients are carriers of communicable diseases, and show that adequate medical examinations and hospitalization are as essential as food and shelter for the Nation's wanderers.

This is the conclusion reached by Miss Beatrice Mullin, head of the social welfare department of the hospital, after a study of the cases of transients referred to the clinic by the Salvation Army and the Travelers Aid Society. Disease carriers lacking homes or medical care constitute a menace to public health unless provision is made for their isolation and cure, Miss Mullin declared. Only four out of 15 boys in one group had no physical abnormalities. They were found to have, between them, twenty-six different pathological conditions, two of the boys being entered in the hospital at once for acute ailments.

Exactly half of these 26 disorders were communicable to the public, Miss Mullin said, and every possible effort was made to segregate them until they had completely recovered.

The average of the 15 boys was 18½ years, classifying them as "younger boys." They had been in Washington on an average of 7½ days. They came from 12 States.

Transients in the higher age groups showed a higher percentage of infectious diseases.

Public patients are received at the hospital from 11 a. m. to 2 p. m. daily. Clinics formerly were held from noon to 1 p. m.

From a daily average of 85 persons treated in the clinics in 1932 the dispensary is caring for an average of about 100 cases a day now. This has meant longer hours of duty for the staff.

The dispensary is a member of the Community Chest.

"I believe that the mental and spiritual effects of this depression era will be even more lasting than the physical ills," Miss Mullin said.

Hunts and Grid Games Divide Society's Time

Saturday Afternoon Meets in Virginia and Maryland Beckon to Lovers of Outdoors; Army-Navy Clash to Draw Many.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

CAPITAL society has been busy for the last few weeks, dividing Saturday afternoons between hunt meets in nearby Virginia and Maryland and football games. The crisp autumn weather inspires a love of the outdoors in even the most sophisticated members of society, and Saturdays are looked forward to as the days to set forth on a trip to some place where the afternoon can be spent in the open.

Yesterday the crowds went in two directions. Lovers of the horse wended their way to Leesburg, Va., to attend the meet of the Loudoun Hunt, and football fans, bundled in furs, set out for Princeton, where the Princeton team battled the Navy squad.

The former Secretary of War and Mrs. Patrick J. Hurley entertained at a smartly appointed hunt breakfast at their estate, Belmont, following the hunt meet. Mrs. Hurley is a member of the hunt and had invited members of the club, as well as numerous Washington friends, to attend the breakfast.

Historic Belmont, where more than a century ago Ludwell Lee made his home, presented a colorful scene. Scattered over the wide lawns, where century-old trees and shrubs added to the natural beauty, the eager horses champed at the bit to be off in hot pursuit of the hounds. Pink-coated huntsmen and baying hounds waited also for the sounding of the horn, and then they were off. Many guests gathered at Belmont to watch the meet get away and, from the wide porches, viewed the spectacle as pack and field streamed toward the haunt of the fox.

Three hours later the huntsmen returned to mingle with the other guests and to partake of the feast served in the fire-lit rooms of the handsome Hurley home.

Mrs. Hurley has been an ardent horsewoman since, as a small girl in Washington, she was taught the art of good horsemanship, and since she and Mr. Hurley moved to Virginia has been even more enthusiastic.

Army-Navy Game Awaited Eagerly.

Next Saturday, Capital society will go to Philadelphia in great numbers to witness the most popular football game of the season, when the Army and Navy will play before thousands of spectators. The Secretary of War and Mrs. George H. Dern plan to occupy their box with their daughters, Mrs. Harry Baxter and Miss Betty Dern, and the Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Claude A. Swanson, with equal enthusiasm, plan to make the trip to spur the Navy team on to victory. The Chief of Staff of the Army, Gen. Douglas MacArthur, will be among the throng, as well the Chief of Naval Operations and Mrs. William H. Standley with their two daughters.

Other high-ranking Army and Navy officials will attend and parties of young people will board the special train early Saturday morning for the gay trip to Franklin Field. Last year, groups of friends made up parties large enough to occupy whole cars and the train assumed the aspect of a holiday crowd of college men and women free for a Christmas vacation.

Other parties will motor to Philadelphia, stopping en route for picnic lunches and arriving [illegible] time to see the [illegible] Midship[illegible] cit[illegible]

Mis[illegible] A Bride Saturday.

The outstanding Capital wedding of the month will take place on Saturday afternoon in St. John's Church, when Miss Rahel Davies, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, will become the bride of Mr. Aldace Walker, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Walker. Many will recall the beautiful wedding of the former Miss Eleanor Davies, sister of Saturday's bride, to Mr. Thomas Patten Cheeseborough, jr., which took place in the same church six years ago this month. Mr. and Mrs. Cheeseborough are making their home in Greenwich, Conn., and Mrs. Cheeseborough has arrived to attend the many prenuptial parties being given in honor of Miss Davies. She will be matron of honor for her sister, and Mr. Cheeseborough, who will arrive on Thursday, will be one of the ushers.

Today, Gen. and Mrs. "Billy" Mitchell, long friends of the Davies family, will entertain at a luncheon for Miss Davies and Mr. Walker at their estate near Middleburg. The guests will be members of the wedding party who have arrived in Washington and a few friends. The home of Gen. and Mrs. Mitchell is one of the handsome estates in the hunting section of the Old Dominion and there Gen. Mitchell has his fine hunters. Both he and Mrs. Mitchell are ardent riders and the guests will find it a treat to visit the well-kept stables and saddle

AVOID a Dangerous Waistline
The reason most women grow fat at forty, is due to the fact that they eat the wrong combinations of food and do not exercise enough to burn up the fatty tissues causing faulty circulation and elimination — the result being a large waist line.
Our methods of exercise are entirely different from any previously used in Washington and are suitable for women of most any age when followed with an electric bath, shower, massaging and ultra violet ray treatment. They are most invigorating, stimulating and—above all they are tiresomeless.

SHOP ON CONNECTICUT AVENUE

There is notable distinction to the offerings of Connecticut Avenue establishments. No detail is slighted. Everything that can contribute to the greater beauty, greater comfort, and greater enjoyment of its selections and services is done with the zeal to meet every need IDEALLY.

In shops, stores and studios of considerate and charming atmosphere, you may unhurriedly make selections from lines exclusive . . . supremely fine . . . models in value, in refinement. You may deal directly with the proprietor or his immediate associates, and enjoy the advantages of the very best personal service. In brief, shopping on Connecticut Avenue is uniquely pleasurable—a welcome diversion in which to delight.

It costs no more on Connecticut Avenue. This fact is often surprising to those who conceive that because Connecticut Avenue concerns are patronized by the wealthy and socially prominent, prices must also be on a higher level. On the contrary, rents and other overhead expenses being lower than in the heart of the downtown section, prices are the lowest that can be quoted on goods and services of equal character.

Enjoy the satisfaction of leisurely shopping in smart shops that are displaying the newest fashions and merchandise . . . the things you want . . . the quality you demand . . . the quality, which more than price, determines worth.

YOU'LL BE BUYING THE BEST

White Sulphur Springs Draws Hunting Crowd

Deer Season Yields to Rabbits and Grouse at Mountain Resort.

White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., Nov. 18.—The late fall days with invigorating mountain air continue to attract a large colony to this year-round resort, which is celebrating its 125th anniversary.

The glint of guns adds to the zest of the hunting season as it did in the days of the buffalo trails when West Virginia was a game paradise for Indian hunting parties and for Daniel Boone.

Many fine specimens of deer were taken from the forest during the last week by hunters from West Virginia and adjoining States, who came by the hundreds. With the close of the deer season attention is now being turned to the pursuit of rabbit, quail and grouse.

Joining the colony at The Greenbrier this week-end were Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Brice P. Disque, of Spuyten Duyvil, N. Y. Gen. Disque was a distinguished leader in the Philippine Insurrection and the World War. They were accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Leamy, of New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Owen Barton Jones and family, of Lake Forest, Ill., arrived this week and have leased a cottage in Florida row for two weeks.

Boston Family Buys Estate.

Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Hammons and two children, of Portland, Me., who came this week are making an indefinite stay.

Mr. and Mrs. Gould Shaw, of Boston, who have occupied a cottage since early summer, will remain until the last of the month before going to New York. During a visit at Upperville, Va., where they went to attend the John Hay Whitney races, Mr.| and Mrs. Shaw purchased an estate of 126 acres at Warrenton, Va., which they will make their permanent home when the hunting season starts next fall. The estate includes extensive stables which will give the owners an opportunity to further develop their interest and enthusiasm in horses and polo. Mr. Shaw, who is a poloist of note, will play with the Warrenton and Middleburg teams.

While walking on the promenade between the Greenbrier and Casino for luncheon yesterday, Mrs. Shaw was seen wearing one of the smartest of fall costumes, which was a grass green tweed suit with three-quarter length coat, a small brown fabric hat with brim and a bright yellow wool scarf imprinted with horses heads.

Mrs. Richard Mitton, of Boston, presented another striking figure in a knit sports dress of scarlet trimmed with white angora, over which she wore a brown coat trimmed with blue fox, topped with a brown felt foldover hat.

Mr. and Mrs. Mitton, Mr. and Mrs. Johnson and Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Evatt, of Boston, are making a two weeks' stay.

Dayton, of Minneapolis; Theodore Reath, Mrs. Frederick Rosengarten and Mrs. H. Frazer Harris, of Philadelphia; Mr. and Mrs. Charles Lee, of Cincinnati, and Oscar L. Chapman, of Washington.

What Today Means

"Scorpio."

If November 19 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 11 a. m. to 12:30 p. m., from 4 to 4:35 p. m. and from 7:20 to 8:20 p. m. The danger periods are from 8 to 9:10 a. m., from 2:45 to 3:40 p. m. and from 5:50 to 6:55 p. m.

You will quite likely feel very much like being by yourself on this date; if permitted this, you will accomplish a great deal in the way of constructive thinking. People will feel disinclined to attend religious services on this date; children, if made to attend, will derive great benefits.

The child born on this November 19 will in all probability be an active little one who will do a great deal of running around, but most of it will be without any purpose. It will have more faults to overcome than the average child, but at the same time it will be possessed of a rare ability to analyze itself and then to really do something about its discovered faults. Possessed of great will power and a desire to do right.

Born on November 19, your whole life is probably wrapped up in your family. If you do not have a family of your own choosing, then you will probably remain in very close association and contact with your parents, brothers and sisters. You are not at all the type who is tied to family apron strings but their interests are your interests and there you remain. More than likely you will never do anything that you believe your family would disapprove of. Even in the selection of a mate, you will be largely guided by the opinions of your family. Needless to say, this general attitude will in time stiffle all originality that you may have within you. You are not the kind who runs home in a whining way with your troubles, but you do take them home for open discussion. You are probably wise enough to break away from you parents' home when you get married and to stand on you own feet and not let them intrude should they attempt to.

If November 19 is the date of your birth, you are most careful about your work; you are thorough and you are generally known never to neglect details. You are not a progressive person. You will get all that you want out of life; you demand not a great deal, a home and enough to meet your daily needs. You are not interested in travel and you will be quite content to spend most of your life in practically one spot. You are inclined to distrust those who are "go-getters."

Successful People Born on November 19:

Ralph Peters, president, L. I. R. R. Mary A. Hallock Foote, artist and author. Fitzhugh Lee, soldier and governor. James A. Garfield, twentieth President of the U. S. Martin F. Conway, congressman. William C. Endicott, lawyer of Massachusetts.

Messrs. H. S. Swann, James W. Wills, Thomas P. McDonagh and P. D. Brown held an opossum hunt at Brentfield.

Mrs. Laurie Mitchell entertained at a bridge luncheon Tuesday.

Mrs. Adrian Posey had as her luncheon guests Tuesday Mrs. Henry Powell, Miss Edelin Wilson and Miss Bessie Hickey, Washington, and Mrs. Johnson, Indian Head.

Miss Kitty Weems Berry was hostess at a buffet supper, the occasion being her birthday.

Mr. and Mrs. Heber Boswell, Alexandria, were guests of Capt. and Miss Mary Boswell.

Aldie, Va.

Aldie, Va., Nov. 18 (Spl.).—Oak Hill, the former home of President James Monroe, a mile east of Aldie, will be thrown open to the public for the fourth and last time this year next Saturday to aid the Loudoun County Hospital. The present owner, Frank C. Littleton, has granted the privilege to the board of lady managers. All of the 50 cents admission fee will be given to the hospital.

The high school faculty was entertained at bridge Thursday evening by Mrs. J. M. Douglas.

Miss Catherine Douglas has returned from Chicago.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. W. A. Evans.

How a Doctor Had Diabetes.

A friend of mine, a physician, has had sugar in his urine and high blood sugar for several years. There may be some reason for thinking his case is one of glycosuria and not true diabetes, though that is not certain and possibly can not be definitely decided. He told me some of his experiences, and they are here set down for the guidance of any person to whose case they apply.

This physician has always been a heavy eater and he is very much overweight. He has lost at least 30 pounds and is greatly improved in appearance and in his sense of well being. There is no sugar in his urine. Incidentally, he has also had albuminuria for some time, but with the improvement in his general condition albumin in the urine is no longer present.

Experience has taught him he can keep his urine free from sugar if he will exercise hard enougt. and keep it up long enough. For years he has walked several miles a day and he swims twice a day in season. These practices did not lessen the sugar in his urine. He improved when he began swimming faster and harder and walking rapidly enough to put him out of breath.

His theory is that leisurely exercise does not burn up much blood sugar, but that pushing himself until he pants does have that effect. He thinks he can recognize certain "feelings" that mean exhaustion of blood sugar or reduction to a low level, and he pushes his work—swimming, walking or other exercise—until he gets that feeling.

He has discontinued worrying, but he is not certain whether that caused sugar to disappear from his urine or is an effect of being sugar free.

Another observation is that fat in the diet upsets his balance more than does sugar or starchy food. He eats very little fats, certainly so when compared with his former eating. Probably he is getting about as much fat is he needs from his own storehouse. However, when he does eat fat he finds it advisable to eat same starchy food with it. This is an old observation, and he had read it often but he had never applied it in his own case.

Diverting briefly, it is the accepted practice among well-informed physicians experienced in treating biabetes to try to balance the fats and the carbohydrates in the diet. If they think a patient needs more fats than his diet supplies they increase the amount of oatmeal he gets and then increase the allowances of fat proportionately.

It appears that there is considerable scientific basis for the old custom of putting cream on oatmeal.

This physician thinks he does better when he discontinues the use of tobacco as he has done several times. As he looks back he thinks he has done best when he went without tobacco. Beyond that he has no proof on that point.

Is Is Harmful.

W. R. N. writes: I take a ¼-grain luminal tablet every night to get a good night's rest. Is this harmful?

Reply.

It is.

Trouble Not Great.

C. R. F. writes: When I go swimming I indulge in quite a bit of underwater swimming, keeping my eyes open. Will this affect the eyes in any way, and is underwater swimming harmful to the general health?

Reply.

It may cause some conjunctivitis, but beyond that it does not harm the eyes. Holding the breath while diving throws considerable strain on the heart and may cause some emphysema or distension of the air sacs of the lungs, but the danger is not great.

THROUGH the ages, parents have made great personal sacrifices so that their boys and girls may reach their heritage with keen, unsullied minds and strong bodies to face the rigors of this world.

THE Community Chest does not believe it would be true to its trust if it forgot the future welfare of our growing citizens entirely, for the exigencies of the present.

BEAR in mind, that many of these agencies are, to a large extent, self-supporting, but the aid of the Chest spells the difference between a balanced budget and a deficit that would make their continuance well-nigh impossible.

Miss Le Gallienne Brings Two Classics of English Literature to the Boards

one of the cinema's most vivacious comediennes, who, in company with Glenda Farrell, is demonstrating what fun may be had by two "Havana Widows," on the screen at the Earle Theater.

On Theaterizing a Classic Gem And Icily Letting Public Down

THERE seems to be no middle ground which may be occupied by a casual layman in his estimate of the adult worth of Lewis Carroll's imaginative fantasy of "Alice in Wonderland;" he either recognizes and acclaims it as an authentic classic of whimsical humor, or forthwith relegates it to the misty purlieus of nonsensical and utter gibberish.

Happily, those taking the latter view comprise a more or less ignominious, and completely incomprehensible, minority of rock-ribbed realists upon the backs of whose imaginations wings have never sprouted.

To many of these, unwittingly perhaps, brief excerpts from "Alice" have become familiar through the years as accepted symbols of a shrewd and tenable philosophy such as might not spring from such rubbish as they pretend to hold "Alice in Wonderland" to be.

There is, for example, a complete doctrine of longevity to be found in the familiar verses in the Caterpillar episode that begin:

"You are old, Father William," the young man said,
"And your hair has become very white;
And yet you incessantly stand on your head—
Do you think, at your age, it is right?"

"In my youth," Father William replied to his son,
"I feared it might injure the brain;
But, now that I'm perfectly sure I have none,
Why, I do it again and again!"

And where is there to be found greater clarity in the exposition of the means by which interminable wrangling may best be precluded than in that succinct and cogent colloquy that occurs in "A Mad Tea-Party?"

"They were learning to draw," the Dormouse went on, yawning and rubbing its eyes, for it was getting very sleepy; "and they drew all manner of things—everything that begins with an M—"

"Why with an M?" said Alice.

"Why not?" said the March Hare.

And is it only from the mouths of babes that one has heard this plaint?

"The Queen of Hearts, she made some tarts,
All on a summer day;
The Knave of Hearts, he stole those tarts
And took them quite away!"

If, in truth, the richly amusing and incisively penetrating observations of Alice and her fabulous little friends are but the infantile puerilities of a wandering and undirected child mind, then Barrie's "Peter Pan," Rostand's lyric "Chantecler" and other flights of crystalline and flawless classic fancy have been similarly without sanity or substance!

* * * *

A DISTINGUISHED British physiologist, Prof. Bertram J. Collingswood, nephew and associate of the creator of "Alice," by virute of his close companionship with Charles Lutwidge Dodgson, up to the time of the older man's death at the age of 66 (Collingswood was 26), becomes the greatest living authority on the complex and, at times, contradictory personality who, during his lifetime, hid behind a nom de plume and has ever since remained an enigma to his millions of admirers..

"His first books, you see, were published under his own name and were gravely mathematical," says Prof. Collingswood, "and he didn't care to have his name associated with anything as frivolous as were the Alice stories.

"Parallel with the Lewis Carroll series he published a succession of mathematical books up to the time of his death. Though it was generally known that my uncle was the author of the other books, he consistently evaded the issue."

Continuing a pleasurable reminiscence, as reported by Gladys Baker, Prof. Collingswood moves on to the topic of his personal relationship with the writer who has brought unalloyed joy to so many adult as well as youthful hearts.

"He came often to our house at Guilford," Prof. Hollingswood continues, "and we enjoyed rare companionship. Together we tramped across the downs, as walking was his chief diversion. Ten miles was nothing to him, and he seemed not at all handicapped by his clerical robes, his high hat and large black umbrella."

"Clerical robes?" was asked.

"Oh, yes, my uncle became a deacon in holy orders at 30, but his activities as a clergyman never interferred with his love of mathematics and his writing. He had an unfailing sense of fun, but would never tolerate the slightest suggestion of irreverence. He stuttered in public speaking, but this slight impediment was never noticeable in conversation. He enjoyed the friendship of such men as Ruskin, Millais, the Rosettis, Sir John Tenniel, who is best known for his illustration of the Alice books; Tennyson, Lord Salisbury and Ellen Terry. His hobby was photography."

Prof. Collingswood was asked if Carroll's stories were frowned upon by some of the modern child educators in England because of their disrepute among leading psychologists. He was emphatic in denial.

"Of course there are fadists who think the books are dangerous because the animals talk. But that is all absurd nonsense. Carroll's books still have a phenomenal sale. 'Alice in Wonderland,' with the Tenniel drawings, has a yearly sale of at least 10,000 copies."

This department is decidedly more apt to look upon that as a modest estimate than would have been the case had his bookshelves not been

Classic Plays Offer Variety With Contrast

Eva Le Gallienne brings two of the finest plays in her large repertory to the National Theater for the week beginning tomorrow night, "Alice in Wonderland," will be the bill on Monday night and for the last half of the week, starting Thursday night.

In "Alice in Wonderland" Eva Le Gallienne and the original company will be seen in the roles made famous by Lewis Carroll, with Josephine Hutchinson as Alice. "Alice in Wonderland" was first presented by Miss Le Gallienne on December 11 of last season at the Civic Repertory Theater, New York. In January, Miss Le Gallienne transferred "Alice" to the New Amsterdam Theater, where it played until the middle of May.

The adaptation of the Carroll story is by Miss Le Gallienne and Florida Friebus. For this production, Richard Addinsell, the English composer, wrote a special musical score. The settings and costumes, designed by Irene Sharaff, are exact reproductions of the Tenniel drawings.

In "Romeo and Juliet," which will be presented Tuesday night and Wednesday matinee and night, Eva Le Gallienne will be seen as Juliet, Richard Waring as Romeo, Donald Cameron as Mercutio, Leona Roberts as the nurse, Walter Beck as Capulet and Sayre Crawley as the Friar.

Miss Le Gallienne first appeared as Juliet in Philadelphia, April 8, 1930. It was said after this production that "as an actress and director, Eva Le Gallienne stepped to the head of her profession. No such chorus of praise has arisen from critics over a Shakespearean production in recent memory."

In presenting Shakespeare's tragic love story and Carroll's masterpiece of humor, Miss Le Gallienne offers two plays greatly differing in subject, but ranking as classic in English literature.

In the company this season are, aside from Miss Le Gallienne, Josephine Hutchinson, Leona Roberts, Walter Beck, Donald Cameron, Sayre Crawley, Nelson Welch, Harold Moulton, Richard Waring, Landon Herrick, David Turk, Lester Scharff, Howard da Silva and others, most of whom have been with Miss Le Gallienne for many years.

Theaters Show Special Chest Film All Week

The short sound-picture, "Human Needs," which is being shown in all Washington film theaters this week, is the result of a contribution made by Pathe News and the Motion Picture Theater Owners of Washington. Sidney B. Lust, of the Motion Picture Theater Owners, who is a member of the Community Chest publicity committee, arranged for the picture.

The Chest desired this year to show a picture depicting Washington scenes and it was to be handled in the form of a newsreel, Al Holland, contact man for Pathe News here, was asked to arrange it. Mr. Holland took the matter up with Jack S. Connolly, of New York, manager of Pathe News, who immediately agreed to make the picture and assigned George Dorsey, ace camera man to do the work. He also provided the film of President Roosevelt's speech which forms the latter part of the talkie.

Not only did Pathe News make the picture, but when Elwood Street, director of the Chest, went to New York to superintend the cutting and narration of the film, Mr. Connolly placed the entire resources of Pathe News at his disposal, so that he was enabled to bring back a finished print the following day.

The picture has attracted a great deal of attention and was highly praised by officials of the Chest.

JASCHA HEIFETZ,

At the Play in New York

By Mark Barron.

NEW YORK, Nov. 18 (AP). Broadway continues to draft the product of foreign playwrights, what with native talent not supplying sufficient fodder for its appetite. French farces, British drawing room episodes, Viennese comedies, Russian dramas, German spectacles, Spanish interludes—all must contribute to the scene behind the footlights in the West Forties.

True, Broadway has grown up, become more continental and not so overly enthusiastic about transoceanic fads, but the stage on these shores still must depend to a large extent upon imports.

THE latest is "I Was Waiting for You," a Viennese comedy. As a blithesome document of literature it reads humorously and effervescently, but it doesn't act as well. This is largely due to the fact that it is heavily and slowly directed, as if it were a melodrama. Viennese comedy is to be taken lightly, like champagne; but this one isn't—it bogs up, as cheesecake and coffee.

The story has to do with a man (Glenn Anders) and a woman (Vera Allen) and their romantic betrayal by a man (Bretaigne Windust) and a woman (Helen Brooks). Miss Brooks is the sweetheart of Mr. Anders, and Miss Allen of Mr. Windust. But Miss Brooks and Mr. Windust fall in love with each other. Life, it seems, gets mixed up like that.

THAT is all there is to the plot, and at that it resolves itself into quite a complex plot as compared with the average Viennese comedy. The only explanation is that, as Alfred Lunt once expressed it, Viennese comedies are written to be acted and not to be analyzed.

So it must be recorded as a fairly entertaining play, but largely due to the fact that the Misses Allen and Brooks and Messrs. Anders and Windust give superb performances. Especially good is Anders, once a Theater Guild satellite who won bouquets for his superior interpretations in two Eugene O'Neill plays, "Strange Interlude" and "Dynamo."

JOAN CRAWFORD disembarked from an afternoon train and is spending her time in town seeing all the new shows. She and Franchot Tone, her new leading man, were present at "Men in White."

The two also were supposed to be at the opening of "Gowns by Roberta" last night, but a last minute report stated that there were no seats available in the first five rows and Miss Crawford would refuse to attend.

Heifetz Plays Season's Only Concert Today

Jascha Heifetz, one of the supreme violin virtuosi of modern times and probably the greatest technical master of that instrument now before the American public, will make his only concert appearance in Washington this season at Constitution Hall this afternoon at 4 o'clock, when he is presented as the second attraction of Mrs. Dorothy Hodgkin Dorsey's Sunday afternoon recital series at that auditorium.

A superb program will tax every resource of this great artist, who will have the assistance at the piano of Arpad Sandor, an unusually gifted Hungarian pianist, who is accompanying Heifetz this season for the first time.

Mr. Heifetz's opening selection will be Franz Schubert's gay and lovely sonatina in G minor (Op. 137, No. 3), a composition of comparative simplicity, yet one that breathes the very essence of Schubert's innocence and beauty of expression. It is in rather marked contrast to the two numbers following, the first of which is Richard Strauss' relatively unfamiliar E flat major sonata, a product of the youthful Strauss, before the tone poems came into existence, but a selection which hints of the coming master.

The Strauss selection offers definite problems of technique, particularly in its finale, with what Lawrence Gilman calls its "intonational chevaux de frise," but its difficulties are hardly to be compared to the taxing technical demands of the Conus (or Konius) concerto, the next number of Heifetz's program, which is almost never heard because of its well-nigh insurmountable difficulties of bowing and fingering.

Technique, however, appears to reach its highest expression in this number and after that, Heifetz will treat us to such selections as his own arrangement of the Spaniard Albeniz's "El Puerto," Brahms' Hungarian Dance No. 20, the Castelnuovo-Tedesco "Alt Wien," and Wieniawski's sprightly and captivating "Scherzo-Tarantelle." The Albeniz and Castelnuovo selections, incidentally, are being played for the first time in this country by Heifetz this season.

Scenery Plays Large Part in Child Theater

Irving Morrow, designer of the attractive sets for "Curdie, the Princess and the Goblin," George MacDonald's famous children's story, which is to be the second offering this season of the Children's Theater of New York, at the National Theater on Saturday morning, November 25, is known here more for his acting in "Once in a Lifetime," George Kaufman's satire of Hollywood, than as a designer of stage sets.

In New York at the Shakespeare Theater, playgoers saw him in a variety of parts, from the first witch in "Macbeth" to Cassio in "Othello." It is Mr. Morrow's contention that acting helps him in designing.

"It is a temptation of the scenic designer," says Mr. Morrow, "to let his imagination run away with him, especially when one has such an unusual opportunity for fastistic design as that offered by 'Curdie, the Princess and the Goblins.' There is the Goblins' palace far down in the mines, where the stalactites and stalagmites are a riot of colors. I had to be careful not to overdo that; but my actor's sense held me in check. Settings should never distract the attention of the audience from the actors. Playgoers, young or old, should never be too conscious of them."

However, it is doubtful that small boys and girls, after viewing the performance of "Curdie," will ever think of this famous story as set in any other background than that of Mr. Morrow's design.

EUGENE ORMANDY,

who will make his first Washington appearance of the season in Constitution Hall on Tuesday evening as conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

JEAN HARLOW,

the original platinum blonde of the screen, whose stature as an actress is constantly growing, as she appears in "Blonde Bombshell," one of her most pretentious films, at Loew's Fox.

A Nimble Historian Reverts To the First of Royal Line

THE eagerly awaited version of Billie Burke's "Ziegfeld Follies," coming to the National Theater December 4, makes unusually interesting a brief account of the first "Follies" to bear the illustrious Ziegfeld trademark.

It was in early June, 1907, that the original "Ziegfeld Follies" was born in the Jardin de Paris, atop the New York Theater Building, on the east side of Broadway, extending from Forty-third to Forty-fourth streets.

The roof garden was oblong, with corrugated iron-roofed auditorium, opened at the sides for ventilation and tarpaulin-curtained for inclement weather. It had movable folding chairs and a pagoda over the elevator entrance for guests of honor.

Back of the orchestra seats ran a wide promenade. In one of the numbers a band of drummer girls paraded—an innovation at that time. In one corner of the garden refreshments were served. At the the north end, commanding a view of the stage, was an exclusive nook where Mr. Ziegfeld, A. L. Erlanger and a few intimate friends nightly gathered for observation and low-toned conversation.

The original edition was programmed as "The Ziegfeld Musical Revue 'Follies of 1907,'" conceived and produced by Mr. Ziegfeld. Book by Harry B. Smith. The principals directed by Herbert Gresham and the chorus by Julian Mitchell." The musical director, Fred Saloman, was the first husband of Lillian Russell and was later succeeded by Maurice Levy.

In the original "Follies" cast the principals included Bickel and Watson, with their travesty German street band and burlesque of the Thaw trial, clever all around comedians. Annabelle Whitford and Grace Leigh were the most famous stage beauties of the period. Grace LaRue, now a stately chanteuse, sang, danced, did splits and turned cartwheels. William Powers was a bright, young fellow who matured into a fine character actor. Lillian Lee was an elongated comedienne and Mlle. Dazie a dancer who gained renown as "The Girl in the Red Mask." There were only about 30 chorus girls.

Within less than a quarter-century the late Florenz Ziegfeld selected more girls who have become famous for stage and screen loveliness and talent than any other man in the world. And it is this same high standard of loveliness that Billie Burke strives to emulate in her new "Ziegfeld Follies" with its 100 glorified chorus girls.

A Prima Donna Of Rare Gifts Here in Opera

Across the musical horizon each season significant personalities flash with meteoric radiance, establishing new records of artistic achievements. This is precisely what the fragile, beautiful, doll-like Hizi Koyke has done in the operatic world by her magnificent depiction of "Madame Butterfly," "Iris," "The Geisha," and now as Yum-Yum in "The Mikado," with which the Gilbert and Sullivan Company will inaugurate its engagement at the National Theater next Monday evening, November 27.

There is a peculiar fascination attached to this Dresden-china doll; she possesses the exterior attributes of the Orient and yet her voice and histrionism have all the earmarks of a prima donna schooled in the finest traditions of Italian vocalization and British dramatic reflection.

Koyke is a graduate of Columbia University, where she studied languages, art, literature and music with the firm determination of devoting her life to teaching American ideas to the younger minds of her ancestral land. The splendid progress she made with her voice, however, induced her tutor to persuade her to abandon her Oriental ambition of teaching, to become an operatic star. After considerable deliberation and some sacrifice she made the decision to answer the call of the stage, with the result that she made her professional debut with the Cincinnati Opera Company, appearing as "Madame Butterfly." Her success was instantaneous, her operatic career launched, her triumph assured.

Her next hit was achieved with the San Carlo Grand Opera Company in "L'Oracolo," "Madame Butterfly," and Mascagni's "Iris;" then came an engagement with the Philadelphia Opera Company, where she appeared in the same repertoire, and again registered a personal triumph.

Koyke has just celebrated her twenty-fifth birthday, is only 5 feet 3 inches tall, and barely tips the scales at 95 pounds; has a wealth of coal black hair reaching down to her knees; dances exquisitely, and sings in seven languages.

Ormandy Waves A Guest Baton Over Symphony

The Philadelphia Orchestra will present its second concert of the season on Tuesday evening, November 21, at Constitution Hall, under the management of T. Arthur Smith Concert Bureau. Eugene Ormandy, popular conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, will direct.

The concert is scheduled to begin promptly at 8:45, after which hour, in accordance with the rule of the Philadelphia Orchestra, the doors will be closed and late-comers not admitted until the intermission.

For the opening number Mr. Ormandy has chosen the beautiful Brahms Symphony No. 1 in C minor. This symphony of Brahm's has been pronounced by many critics as the most beautiful music ever written. It is recognized for what it is, noble, austere, abounding in mellowness and humanity—an eloquent fusion of epic power and lyric tenderness.

The first number after the intermission is a transcription of Molinari's of the piano piece written by Debussy and first played by the New York Symphony Orchestra in 1924. This number portrays only joy and laughter and is filled with emotions. Debussy never has surpassed the ease and assurance with which he makes his rhythms utter his emotions. This number is followed by one of Ravel's, started just before the great war, not completed until 1917 and later published and dedicated to friends of the composer who had fallen in the war. This suite is entitled, "Le Tembeau de Couperin" and consists of four movements, the Prelude, Forlane, Menuet and Rigaudon.

The final number is a drinking song, one of the Roumanian folk songs by Georges Enesco, called "Trois Rhapsodies Roumaines." This is based upon several of the jolliest folk songs and dances of Enesco's country.

Mae to Tour.

Mae West, star of "I'm No Angel," plans a five-month personal appearance tour throughout the United States after her next film, "It Ain't No Sin."

News and Comment of Timely Interest Concerning Theater People and Events

Coming Events Of Importance In Song Realm

Two important musical events are announced for Washington during the next fortnight by Mrs. Dorothy Hodgkin Dorsey, Washington concert impresario, who is presenting Jascha Heifetz, the violinist, at Constitution Hall this afternoon at 4 o'clock, in full-length recital.

The first of these coming events will be the recital at Constitution Hall on Tuesday afternoon, November 28, at 4:40 o'clock, of Lily Pons, the world's leading coloratura soprano and prima donna of the Metropolitan Opera Company, who will inaugurate Mrs. Dorsey's Tuesday afternoon concert series of 1933-34. Pons has not been heard in Washington since the season of 1931-32, and a capacity crowd is expected to mark her only Washington recital appearance of the season.

Another outstanding attraction on the calendar will be the appearance at Constitution Hall on Sunday afternoon, December 3, at 4 o'clock—two weeks from today—of the Don Cossack Russian Male Chorus, under the leadership of Serge Jaroff. The Don Cossack Chorus, consisting of 36 former cavalry officers of the Russian Imperial Army, has never failed, in the past four years, to pack Constitution Hall to capacity, and a record-breaking audience is expected for its coming concert, the only one it will give here this season.

It Seems Best To Cultivate A Bit of Brain

One dollar an hour for beauty.

That is all it is worth by itself, in the opinion of Darryl Francis Zanuck, the man selected by Joseph M. Schenck to guide the producing destinies of Twentieth Century Pictures.

Although feminine beauty is greatly in demand now in the film studios because of the popularity of musical pictures and the lull in Broadway production, Zanuck, who is always on the alert for the combination of beauty and brains that makes star material for the screen, rates beauty lowest in importance.

In dollars and cents here is Zanuck's rating:

Beauty, $8 per day.

Brains, $100 per day.

Beauty plus brains, $1,000 per day.

It is Zanuck's claim that, since the advent of talking pictures, not a single actress has become a star on the strength of beauty alone.

"The most beautiful actress in the world is not worth more than $5[illegible] a week without brains and talent," Zanuck said. "We have them by the hundreds in the dance choruses of our musical films. Occasionally they have brains, and those few are bound to emerge from the chorus to stardom, as in the case of Joan Crawford. But beauty alone can not bring its own weight in dollars a week."

Evil Days Are Upon Star Who Charmed World

If Clara Kimball Young, to whom Hollywood opened its arms 15 years ago after she had reached the heights on New York's stage, is destitute, as her attorneys said last Monday, she prefers not to parade her misfortune before the public or even her friends.

The once world-famous actress, her beauty faded hardly at all, last week refused to see callers when she was located in a small flat where she is living alone in Hollywood.

The world would not have known about her ill luck if it had not been for the filing of a suit by attorneys representing her at Benton Harbor, Mich. The suit named as defendant Arthur J. Aylesworth, her uncle, and sought to collect $5,000 on a promissory note which the actress allegedly received from her uncle in return for a loan 13 years ago.

Miss Young is not, however, living in a theatrical home as was stated by her attorneys in Benton Harbor. She resides in a modest and rather faded little flat within hailing distance of the glittering corners over which her electrically lighted name once held sway.

When Miss Young was "in the money," as Hollywood terms it, she dispensed it with a prodigality characteristic of show business. That, and unfortunate investments, depleted her funds.

Personages in Stage Offerings, Current and to Come

BERTA DONN, prominent in the cast of "The Student Prince," this week's stage attraction at Loew's Fox Theater.

Drama Club Is Organized for Study of Play

A new group of play-producing students, known as the Drama Appreciation Club of George Washington University, will present three one-act plays Tuesday night, November 21, at the Western Presbyterian Church, 1900 H street northwest, at 8:15 o'clock.

This club is directed by Mrs. George Romney and Mrs. Theodore Tiller. After the manner of large universities, there will be no charges for these plays. They are open to the students, their parents and the public. This group is bearing in mind that practice in the drama, as well as in any other field of endeavor, is more important than theory.

The aim of the Drama Appreciation Club is to put into practice three one-act plays each month, with a trilogy of short plays produced every four weeks. Certainly a golden opportunity will be afforded to all university students interested in acting. Later the plays of students will be produced.

Mrs. George Romney, who is directing the plays, assisted by Mrs. Tiller, is well equipped for her work, having studied with the Moscow Art Theater School for a year, coming to Washington after a contract for several pictures with M-G-M in Hollywood.

Actress Knows Ailments That Afflict "Road"

When Katharine Cornell returned from her summer's holiday spent in the Bavarian Alps, she told the New York ship-news reporters that whatever might be the press and the public's opinion of her Juliet, her first Shakespearean venture, she was certain that the road would insure the success of her forthcoming tour because good plays presented by good actors always are well received through the country and she intends that her company shall be the best she can assemble.

"The so-called decline of the road is not due to talking pictures or to other competitive entertainments," said the actress. "It is due to the lack of first-rate plays produced in a first-rate manner. The way to become a good actor is to act on the road. Broadway is crowded with hothouse players who never have been out of the city."

Fame Abroad Brings Girl to Hollywood

Frances Drake, 19-year-old American girl who took a long route to Hollywood, has arrived in the film city under contract. Five years ago, she went from New York to England to attend finishing school. She then went on the London stage and later into English pictures, where she was noticed and brought to Hollywood by Paramount.

Grid to Screen.

Gil Berry, University of Illinois all-American grid star, canceled a lucrative professional football contract to cast his lot with the movies when he won a role in the worldwide contest for "The Search for Beauty."

EDDIE HILL, half—and the "nut" half, it may be said—of the team of Hill & Hoffman, on the stage at the Earle Theater this week.

REGGIE WHITE, one of the sprightly adornments of the "Burlesk Stars of 1933" company, opening at the Gayety Theater with matinee today.

CLOVERLY WARREN AND MARY FARREN as the nurse and the princess, in "Curdie, the Princess and the Goblin," second of the Children's Theater productions, at the National next Saturday morning.

Theaterizing a Classic Gem

replenished with a new copy of "Alice" last Christmas by one of that vast army of enthusiasts who look upon the Carroll work as the unchallenged extant apotheosis of sapient wit and whimsical humor. That army must embrace more than a paltry annual 10,000!

• • • •

ALL this is pertinent, of course, only because between now and the first of the year the Capital is to be privileged to observe with what skill the two branches of the modern theater are able to apprehend the gayety, the humor and the charm of "Alice in Wonderland" as a source of material valuable to both the living and the shadow drama.

The current week brings Miss Eva Le Gallienne and her Civic Repertory Theater Company from New York to refresh the theatergoing memory on the many qualities of enduring beauty in both "Alice" and Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet."

Miss Le Gallienne's production of the Carroll classic already has elicited the highest public and critical acclaim in New York, Boston and other centers of cultural activity east of the Father of Waters. The typing of the characters in the play and its pictorial keynote may be said to have been in large measure based upon the prolific illustrations of the book by Sir John Tenniel, which have become as much a trademark of the printed text as Dore's drawings for Milton's "Paradise Lost" or Steele's familiar sketches of Sherlock Holmes in the Conan Doyle stories.

Public response has uniformly been greater to "Alice in Wonderland," as stage entertainment, than Miss Le Gallienne's tragic Shakespearean vehicle, fine as has been the public reaction to that profoundly sympathetic love story.

Washington's interest in "Alice" will be whetted by the knowledge that within a very few weeks Paramount will have ready for Christmas release its much-discussed talking version of the same story.

Here should be as fruitful an opportunity as ever may reasonably be expected to present itself for a close analysis of the comparative potentialities of the stage and the screen in the utilization of imaginative whimsies of this nature for presentation within the four walls of a theater.

The cinema "Alice," by every intimation and forecast, will indulge a characteristic tendency toward extravagant effect in its picturization of the remarkable adventures encountered by Alice in her journey among strange companions. In its depiction of character as well as environment, the screen "Alice in Wonderland" will take on all of the fantastic splendor of a typical Christmas spectacle in the best London manner.

Whether or not in this process anything of the spirit and gossamer quality of the Carroll masterpiece will be lost remains to be seen. The possibilities are such that the eventuation is eminently worth watching.

IT is among the more earnest hopes of the theatergoing public, the producers and the theater management that the National Capital's meager season of theatrical entertainment may escape in future the evil consequences of such defections as Pola Negri's last week from the cast of "A Trip to Pressburg."

Whether Miss Negri's presence would have bolstered a creaking play appreciably, or not, is beside the point.

She had been heralded as one of the brilliant luminaries of the current season from the first days of its opening to the very beginning of her supposed engagement and many tickets had been sold to gratify the purchasers' justified presumption that they were to see Pola Negri as well as the play in which she appeared, whatever it might prove to be.

This expectation, through no fault of the theater or, so far as is known, of the producers, failed miserably of realization.

So nebulous were Miss Negri's intentions in the matter during the early days of the week that definite assurance could not be obtained from her suite in a Pittsburgh hotel whether any part of her engagement here would be fulfilled.

It was not until late Tuesday afternoon, and then at the insistent behest of the National Theater management, that authority was secured to refund the purchase price of tickets to those who had bought them particularly to see Miss Negri in her debut as a stage star of drama in the English tongue. It was especially regretted that this unfortunate situation had arisen in the case of one of the American Theater Society's Washington subscription plays.

If Miss Negri was physically unable to appear in accordance with the terms of her contract, culpability can not, of course, attach to her. Throughout the week, however, there was a persistent impression afoot among the members of the "Trip to Pressburg" cast and others with recent close contacts in Pittsburgh, where the play had opened, that the gravity of the star's condition was being alarmingly exaggerated.

The generally accepted view was something to the effect that that, at times, seemingly unnecessarily drastic precept of the American theater that "the show must go on" never had penetrated to those precincts of artistic endeavor in which the silken and sullen Miss Negri had acquired her notions of professional obligation.

It is to be feared that Miss Negri has not effectually smoothed the path of her future career—if any—as a flaming star of the native drama. The chances are she has been much more successful, if such was her veiled intent, in writing a period to it.

Famous Tenor Will Sing for Local Charity

John McCormack, famous Irish tenor, will come to Washington on the evening of December 4 to give a charity concert of his old-time favorite songs. He will have with him, as accompanist, William Daly, noted composer and orchestra leader.

During the recent bank holiday, the funds of the St. Vincent de Paul Society were "frozen" in a local bank. Because of this, the society has no working funds for the coming winter. A national organization, it caters to the needy of every creed and denomination.

As a member of the St. Vincent de Paul Society, McCormack is contributing his services, so that all moneys received will be expended for a worthy cause.

A list of patrons and patronesses, comprising the names of socially prominent people, is now being compiled. It includes, among others, the Japanese Ambassador and Mme. Debuchi, the French Ambassador and Mme. de Boulaye, the Minister of the Irish Free State and Mrs. Michael MacWhite, Mrs. Stanley Rinehart, Mrs. Evalyn McLean and Gen. and Mrs. Edward Logan.

Trying to Pin Vast Handicap On Little Kid!

Hollywood's maddest search for a film type is on!

They're looking for a baby that looks like Jimmie Durante to play "Schnozzle's" own child in his latest picture, "Joe Palooka."

And guess who the mother is—on the screen?

Lupe Velez, the original hot-cha girl herself!

Edward Small, production chief of Reliance, which is making the "Palooka" all-star comedy for United Artists release with Stuart Erwin, Marjorie Rambeau, Robert Armstrong, Thelma Todd, William Cagney (brother of the famous Jimmy, in his film debut), Mary Carlisle, Gus Arnheim and his orchestra and other personalities sharing honors with Durante and Lupe, has sent scouts into the highways and byways to find a baby with an authentic "schnozzle" and plenty of the Durante thisa and thata.

Small's associates said it couldn't be done—that no baby could look like Durante—but the producer insists that he'll find the right beschnozzled baby by the time he needs it.

Rub-a-Dub Twice; Baby LeRoy Howls

Baby LeRoy went temperamental for the first time the other day—all because of two Saturday baths. The world's youngest screen hero was scrubbed and powdered in his studio tub, then wheeled to the sound stage for a scene with Dorothea Wieck in "Miss Fane's Baby Is Stolen."

But when water was turned into a tub for a sequence in which Miss Wieck and the baby bathe, the youngster broadcast a lusty protest.

Love Theme Has Been Dominant In Most Popular Screen Stories

THE sex drama may have its inning of popularity, the crime play its box office lure, but the fact remains that the stories, pictures and plays that have been most popular throughout the decades have been those based on love, either that of sweethearts or of mother for child.

"Madam X" and "Sarah and Son" made Ruth Chatterton a great star in talking pictures. Helen Hayes rose to national acclaim with her brilliant performance in "The Sin of Madelon Claudet." "Over the Hill," "Stella Dallas," "Four Sons," "Lady for a Day," "Cavalcade," all box office successes of the first magnitude, had the predominant strain of mother love.

"Maedchen in Uniform," that superlative picture which laid bare the soul of a young girl starved for a mother's love and drawn, accordingly, to her sympathetic school teacher, had this same emotional appeal.

Now the newest motion picture drama on this theme, "Cradle Song," is about to reach the screen, with Dorothea Wieck, the school teacher of "Maedchen in Uniform," cast in her first American starring picture. "Cradle Song" tells the story of a thwarted mother urge, a striving for something that could not be.

When Paramount selected Dorothea Wieck for the role of Joanna in this famous play everyone was gratified, including the author, Martinez Sierra. His play, a story of mother love behind convent walls, had been presented throughout Europe and America, with the finest emotional players of each country in the sympathetic role of Joanna. Sierra had seen the picture "Maedchen in Uniform" and felt then that its star was a girl who could do the part justice.

Although Miss Wieck had been approached by every motion picture company after her sensational performance as Fraulein von Bernberg, she accepted a contract with Paramount and arrived in Hollywood several months ago.

There were many story conferences and several roles were discussed, but none of them met with either Dorothea Wieck's approval or that of officials. Then it was recalled that Paramount had for 12 years owned the motion picture rights to "Cradle Song" and had never produced it because they were awaiting just the right actress to play Joanna. Dorothea Wieck was the perfect choice.

So again the element of mother love, this time minus a real mother, provided material for the screen.

Artist Brings Museum Pieces Of Vast Value

Jascha Heifetz, the violinist, will bring to Washington with him today at least two celebrated violins of the collection of famous and valuable instruments he owns. One is a Stradivarius over 200 years old; the other, a Guarnerius of almost the same age.

The Guarnerius was made in 1742 and is valued at a fabulous price, though Heifetz declines to sell it. It belonged to Wilhelmj, the great German violinist who toured the United States years ago, and before that it belonged to Ferdinand David, a noted violinist of the last century, who was Wilhelmj's teacher and who gave it to that virtuoso when David's playing days were over.

At one time it belonged to Sarasate, the famous Spanish violinist and composer, who had it two years, but it is known to violin collectors the world over as the "David Guarnerius" and as such, it is listed in all collectors' catalogues. The Strad was made by the master in 1730, and like the Guarnerius, is in excellent condition.

Tropical Honeymoon In Store for Sally

The postponed honeymoon of Sally Eilers and Director Harry Joe Brown may take place on location in Central America, it was indicated when Brown was assigned to direct "Green Gold," which will be filmed near the Equator.

Brown now is directing "Sitting Pretty" and supervising story work on "The Handsome Brute" and "No More Women" and can not leave on a honeymoon for many months.

Pulchritude a Vital Element Of Gayety Hit

"Burlesk Stars of 1933," the Wilner Wheel traveling road show which opens at the Gayety Theater this afternoon, features a pageant of pulchritude.

In keeping with the Max Wilner policy of glorified burlesk, the current attraction displays former Ziegfeld, Earl Carroll and George White chorus girls, arrayed in the splendor that only mother nature and the best of New York's costumers can command.

The cast of "Burlesk Stars of 1933" includes the foremost that this field of entertainment has to offer, among them Reggie White, Billie Diamond, Jean Bodine, Hap Hyatt, Lew Devine, Ernie Mack, Gene Darby, Patsy Johnson, Billie Hayes, Hilda Henderson and many others.

Prepared by burlesk's outstanding producer, Allan Gilbert, this show at the Gayety Theater promises prolific gratification to those who sing "Who's afraid of bigger and better burlesque?"

No Cook.

Although the women of her country are noted for being good housekeepers, Dorothy Wieck, new continental star now completing "Cradle Song," admits that she is not dometsically inclined and doesn't know a thing about cooking.

JOHN McCORMACK, famous Irish tenor, who will sing in Constitution Hall on Monday, December 4, for the benefit of the St. Vincent de Paul Society.

Janet Richards.

Miss Janet Richards, at her lecture tomorrow morning on "Affairs Political and International," will bring up to date the outstanding developments in the world's work for the past week, with some comment on the speculations of the Press of the country concerning the delay in the negotiations for Russian recognition, and the increasing opposition of organized groups thereto.

Causes for renewed friction between France and Germany will also be considered. Large maps are used to clarify the European situation. These talks are given every Monday morning at 11 o'clock at the Willard.

International Opera Company Opens With Mascagni and Leoncavallo Tonight

Visiting Artists to Present 9 Grand Opera Performances

Four Verdi Operas and Works by Ponchielli, Gounod and Bizet Included in Repertoire to Be Given in Washington Auditorium.

This evening in the Washington Auditorium, the International Opera Company will begin an eight-day engagement during which nine performances of grand opera will be given at popular prices. The opening bill presents Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana" and Leoncavallo's "Pagliacci," to be followed on Monday night by Bizet's "Carmen," with Carmela Ponselle of the Metropolitan, in the title role.

On Tuesday night the offering will be Ponchielli's "La Gioconda" and Verdi's "Rigoletto" will be presented Wednesday night. Carmela Ponselle will appear again on Thursday night, singing the role of Amneris in Verdi's "Aida." For Friday night the attraction is Verdi's "La Traviata." On Saturday afternoon there will be a matinee performance of "Aida" and at night Verdi's "Il Trovatore" will be given. The engagement will close next Sunday night with Gounod's "Faust." Evening performances are scheduled for an 8:15 curtain.

Gabriele Simeone, a brilliant young conductor, who has won distinction at open-air productions of opera at the New York Polo Grounds and in other large auditoriums, is the musical director. He will conduct all performances with the exception of "Rigoletto," which will be directed by Walter Grigaidis.

The List of Artists.

The roster of artists appearing with the International Opera Company is as follows, in alphabetical order:

Sopranos—Carlotta Bruno, Ruth Coleman, Lavinia Darve, Florence Misgen, Maria Olla, Margaret Ringo and Emilia Vergeri. Contraltos—Grace Angelaw, Elisabeth Girard, Carmela Ponselle and Bertha Swan. Tenors—Giuseppe Barsotti, Fortunato de Angelis, Ugo Martinelli, Edward Ransome and Constante Sorvino. Barytones—Lloyd Harris, Eugenio Prosperoni, Ciro de Ritis and Giuseppe Martino-Rossi. Bassos—Amund Sjovik and William Terry.

"Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Pagliacci," which comprise the opening bill, are usually performed together, not only because they both deal with dramas of country life, but also because of the circumstances connected with their composition. Both were written by unknown composers who attained immediate and sensational success. Pietro Mascagni, the son of a baker in Leghorn, was born December 7, 1863. He led an obscure life as music teacher and conductor of itinerant opera companies. In 1889 the music publisher, Sonzogo, offered a prize for the best one-act opera to be submitted to him.

Mascagni obtained the libretto of "Cavalleria Rusticana" and set to work on the music, which he composed in a rapid flow of inspiration. He submitted the opera and it was awarded the prize. It was first produced in Rome on May 17, 1890, and before the performance was half over the audience was wild with excitement and enthusiasm. Mascagni's fame spread through Italy. Medals were struck in his honor and the king conferred upon him the order of the Crown of Italy.

Ruggiero Leoncavallo, composer of "Pagliacci," had also undergone hardships as a struggling musician, making his livelihood as a teacher and as pianist in cafe concerts. He planned a vast operatic trilogy on Italian subjects which he hoped would rival Wagner's "Ring." He completed the first opera and submitted it to a publisher who was interested in the idea, but nothing happened. He waited for three years and then in exasperation went to see Sonzogo, who encouraged him to write a short realistic opera in a vein similar to Mascagni.

Working with impetuous fire, he wrote the words and music of "Pagliacci" in four months. Sonzogo accepted it at once for publication and it was produced May 21, 1892, in Milan with such success that Leoncavallo, too, became famous overnight. Both he and Mascagni subsequently wrote other operas, but neither composer ever duplicated his first success.

Tragedy With "Carmen."

Georges Bizet, whose "Carmen" will be sung Monday night, died three months after this opera was first produced in Paris on March 3, 1875. Strange to say, the first performance was coldly received and there is a persistent tradition that Bizet's death was caused by his profound discouragement over this failure.

But the tradition has little basis in fact. Although Bizet had previously written two dramatic works of remarkable talent, "Les Pecheurs des Pes Perles" and "L'Arlesienne," it is "Carmen" alone that established his rank as one of the greatest operatic composers.

Amilcare Ponchielli, composer of "La Gioconda," which will be heard Tuesday night, occupies an important place in the history of opera. He was born in 1934 and early in his career he took a prominent part in the movement to revivify the lyric stage in Italy. By precept and example he sought to improve the quality of operatic writing, to mold the music more continuously to the action and to enrich the orchestration. His influence was far-reaching and his operas were popular in his day, although they have since been overshadowed by the world-wide success of his brilliant pupil, Giacomo Puccini.

John McCormark, Erin's distinguished tenor, will give a recital for the benefit of the St. Vincent de Paul Society in Constitution Hall Monday night, December 4. He will be accompanied by William Daly in a program of the songs beloved by the public.

During the "bank holiday" the funds of the St. Vincent de Paul Society were tied up, and the organization has since been without resources for philanthropic work this winter. The organization carries on its activities without distinction between creeds or denominations. As a member of the Society, Mr. McCormack is contributing his services for this recital, and the entire proceeds will go to charity.

Marcel Dupre, eminent French organist and composer, will give a recital in the First Congregational Church at 8:30 p. m. November 29 under auspices of the D. C. Chapter, American Guild of Organists.

A member of a family distinguished in music for generations, Marcel Dupre began the study of the organ at the age of 7. At 10 he played in public and at 12 he was appointed organist of St. Vivien in Rouen. He studied with Guilmant and Widor at the Paris Conservatory and won the Prix de Rome with his cantata, "Psyche." His career since then has been one of continuous success.

Leading Tenor Sings Nov. 26 With Symphony

Conductor Kindler Plans Popular Program for Concert.

Edward Johnson, distinguished tenor of the Metropolitan Opera, will appear as soloist with the National Symphony Orchestra Sunday afternoon, November 26, in Constitution Hall. Conductor Hans Kindler has arranged a program of popular character for this occasion.

The program will open with the "Tragic Overture" of Brahms. Mr. Johnson will follow with a group of songs, and the first half of the concert will close with Chaikovski's "Nut-Cracker" suite. The second half will be devoted entirely to Wagnerian selections.

After the prelude to the first act of "Lohengrin," Mr. Johnson will sing several excerpts from Wagner's operas, and the program will close with the stirring "Ride of the Valkyries."

Washingtonians will welcome the return of Edward Johnson, who has frequently been heard here in recital, as well as in the leading tenor roles in Deems Taylor's operas, "The King's Henchman" and "Peter Ibbetson."

Gil-Smythe Applauded in Howard U. Concert.

Appearing in the second of the Howard University concert series, Harry Gil-Smythe, pianist, pleased a large audience last Tuesday night. His opening number, Busoni's arrangement of Bach's "Praeludium, Fugue and Allegro" in E flat, was played with competent technique.

In his reading of Chopin the pianist disclosed poetic sensitiveness and a good command of tone-color. The recital closed with the Schulz-Evler arabesques on the "Beautiful Blue Danube" waltz in which the pianist called upon his technical resources with excellent effect.

Zanzig's Hints Afford Impetus To Council Plan

Will Encourage Formation of Musical Recreation Groups Here.

Following the recent music institute conducted by Augustus D. Zanzig, of the National Recreation Association, plans are being perfected by the Council of Social Agencies to continue activities in Washington along the lines suggested.

A permanent committee is being formed under the chairmanship of Thomas P. Settle, of the National Park and Planning Commission. Mrs. William H. King will serve on this committee, wnich will include prominent musicians and music lovers.

One plan is the establishment of a central information service which will supply data and serve as a contact bureau for those desiring to join groups for musical recreation. Informal singing of good music by neighborhood groups in private homes is one phase of this activity.

"Beautiful music is almost always easy for people to sing, if they really want to sing it," declares Mr. Zanzig. "People who imagine that a Bach chorale is difficult music because it was written by Bach, will be surprised to find how simple it is. And the appetite for good music grows with what it feeds upon."

Ensemble singing of children will be encouraged by the committee and this work will begin with the preparation of Christmas carols. A spring festival of song by a children's chorus is a part of the plan, with preliminary training in school or neighborhood groups.

Women Demonstrate Their Value to Nation Is Greatest After Reaching the Age of 40

Roster of Successes Points Adage That Experience Wins

National Leaders of Women's Organizations and Holders of Responsible Executive Positions Found in Elder Age Group.

The 20 years of a woman's life after 40 are the most successful and useful. This is the consensus of opinion of women leaders and members of women's organizations, especially those of a business and professional character. To answer the challenge in the recent suggestion that women of 40 in business and professions are ready to retire, many organizations and clubs are planning to honor their "over 40" women leaders.

Practically every one of the presidents of women's organizations, local and national, are over 40. They exert wide influence on the woman thought of the Nation, and affect trend of thought of the entire Nation. They are the hardest worked class of women in the country. The average work day of a president of a large national woman's organization begins at breakfast or before and continues until after an evening meeting.

Mrs. Grace Morrison Poole, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, has visited most of the States of the Union and most of the large cities in them during the past year.

Women Executives Over 40.

Mrs. Russell William Magna, president general of the D. A. R., made a flying trip by airplane to 14 States' conferences before she came back to direct the fall work of her organization of thousands of women.

Most of the women who hold important executive positions in the Government are well over 40. This includes Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor. Mrs. Roosevelt, wife of the President, now over 40, is now more active than in any previous period.

It was Mrs. Albert Sidney Burleson, wife of the Postmaster General of the Wilson Administration, who first took up the cudgels in behalf of the women of 40 or over. Mrs. Burleson asked the pertinent question as to what the future held or could hold for women who had raised a family of children, seen them married or started on their independent roads of life.

Acknowledged by Public.

The answer came quick and sure, in the public press, in addresses and in letters that flooded the home of the Postmaster General. No woman of 40 or over today has to ask such a question. They all know that they have a place in the world and that their place is recognized.

The program of the National League of Women Voters as related to the NRA is being clearly outlined by the League speakers who are on many programs at banquets and luncheons and meetings not only in Washington but all over the country.

Legion Resolution Requests Abolition of U. S. Pay Cuts

Committee on Veterans' Preference in Civil Service Acts.

The American Legion veterans preference committee, consisting of Department Commander Rice W. Means, chief adviser; Edward L. Marthill, chairman; Edgar Baker, vice chairman; John Arthur Shaw, secretary; William P. Kershner, Hugh A. Kerwin, James A. Kehoe, Raymond A. Burke, Norman R. Grant, M. H. Bennett, Rexford A. Madden, Miss Jane R. Cox, Joseph J. Idler, Earl J. Brown, E. C. Babcock, George H. Rycraw and Mrs. Kate Briggs, met at department headquarters November 3. It was the first committee meeting under the new administration.

A resolution urging President Roosevelt and Congress immediately to abolish pay cuts now in effect, was adopted. The resolution recommended that Government salaries be returned to former rates.

Another resolution was adopted urging President Roosevelt immediately to set up a reemployment register of the Civil Service Commission and asking the President to issue an executive order making it mandatory that all former Government employes who had a civil service status on leaving the service, be reemployed before any other persons in all Federal Government positions, either Civil Service or non-Civil Service; that such executive order specifically provide that in the preparation of reemployment registers all veterans, wives of totally disabled veterans and widows of veterans be placed at the top of the class or group to which their prior employment would make them eligible.

Department Commander Means outlined the District of Columbia department program on veterans' preference. He outlined plans to bring the matter of veterans' preference before the next session of Congress. Chairman Marthill announced that five members of the committee would be selected at the next meeting to prepare the presentation of veterans' preference legislation before committees of both branches of Congress.

About 10,000 veterans employed in the Government in the District of Columbia are interested in the work of the committee.

Legion Leaders at Meeting.

Department Commander Rice W. Means and Department Adjutant Howard S. Fisk of the American Legion attended the annual conference of commanders and adjutants at National headquarters in Indianapolis.

The former addressed the representatives on "Complete Legislative Program for 1934" and the latter on "The National Rehabilitation Program in All Its Phases."

A feature of the conference was the fifth annual National telegraphic roll call, which occurred Friday at 12 o'clock noon, when reports were received from each of the 58 departments on the standing of paid-up members for 1934 as compared with the department quotas at the same time last year.

The District department, through Frank A. Connolly, department membership officer, wired the standing of the department as arranged by H. L. Plummer, assistant National adjutant in charge of membership. Each year commanders and adjutants of every department in the United States and colonial possessions are invited to attend a conference by the National officials of the American Legion and the policies and accomplishments of the organization are discussed and plans made for the coming year.

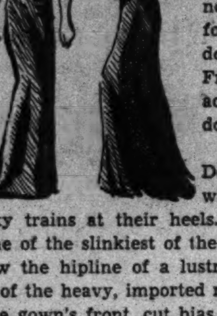
American Women Tame Athletic Stride to Cope With Glamorous French Modes

Oxford for Formal Wear Is Fashion's Latest Vagary

Fuschia Velvet Makes Smart Full-Length Evening Coat; Monkish Influence Extends to Pajamas; Tea Hour Inspires New Hats.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

Now that trains are swishing a glamorous trail across the country from Washington to San Francisco, it's rather amusing to look back on the anxiety and misgivings with which they were launched by the first-string French designers. It's really quite a good joke on those supercilious couturiers who thought of American women as galloping athletes, at ease only in sports clothes or evening gowns that permit an untrammeled stride. They were perfectly sweet about the dashing manner in which we wear tennis shorts and bathing togs. They generously admitted that we were no end smart in dinner dresses. But ultra-formal gowns with sweeping trains—ah, my dears, that was something else. Frankly, the Frenchmen thought that even if we dared accept this mode, we wouldn't know what to do with it.



Well, come on over, Mr. Couturier and Miss Designer and behold the insouciance with which our American girls strut around with slinky trains at their heels.

One of the slinkiest of the season is attached in two sharp points just below the hipline of a lustrous, black blistered satin gown. The dull side of the heavy, imported material makes the long, fan-shaped train.

The gown's front, cut bias, clings to the body in sculptured line from high bateau neck to slightly flared bottom. A shallow, unobtrusive point where skirt and bodice meet does its full share in making the waist look wasp-like and fragile. The medium V in the back may be cut deeper for the woman who is not adverse to showing her vertebrae.

Capelet Nestles Beneath Chin.

One of the smart new capelets that are fast usurping the jacket's place accompanies this stunning gown. Radiant, blistered satin also makes the capelet which nestles beneath the chin in front and fastens in back with a crystal ruby and rhinestone ornament. The shimmering folds extend to the elbows and hang to the waist in deep points in back.

The woman who selects this formal ensemble will have lots of fun trying to decide whether it was designed for dinner or evening wear. As a matter of fact, its dramatic elegance is as persuasive at 8 o'clock as at midnight.

The gown and capelet may be copied in almost any color. The price is $89.50.

Velvet Makes Shirtwaist Frock.

Tailored velvet. It's just as intriguing as it sounds when the velvet is mahogany brown in chiffon weight, and makes a severe little dress with masculine collar and shirtwaist top.

The shirtwaist dress of luxurious material has been "news" for the last few weeks. Most such dresses have lame or metallic tops which are entirely too glittering for the woman who wants richness with conservatism. The answer to her problem lies in this velvet dress, ideal for street or informal luncheon wear. It would make an adorable traveling costume.

The waist buttons down the front with rhinestone balls which delightfully temper the lines' severity. Strap cuffs, with rhinestone studs, finish gathered-at-the-shoulder sleeves. The skirt back has that glued-to-the-figure appearance by virtue of gores at the hipline. The front has a wide center panel which gives slight fullness at the hemline. A belt, starting at the panel's sides, ties neatly in back.

This dress is priced at $39.75.

Cording Trims Evening Coat.

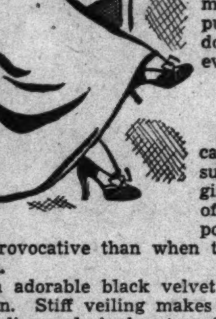
Luscious, purple fuschia velvet makes a full-length evening coat that suavely sets forth the tubular silhouette. Three plump rows of cording border the huge mushroom collar and ornament the full sleeves several inches below the shoulder line. The sleeves are gathered into loose, narrow cuffs at the wrist. Matching crepe lines this handsome wrap.

Price, $49.50.

Ribbon Bows on Insteps.

Fashion's vagaries have invaded the shoe kingdom. The happy result of the invasion is an oxford for evening wear. It's a modified oxford to be sure, but the origin of the high-cut lines is unmistakable.

White satin, with grosgrain ribbon bow poised on the instep, has silver kid piping. The twinkling silver outlines two octagonals cut in the vamp as well as the sandal-influenced shank.



Black satin slippers have gold kid piping. The white ones may be dyed to match any evening gown.

This oxford-for-evening idea is really very nice after one grows accustomed to it. No more need the dancer dig her toes deep in her pumps to keep them from bobbing up and down at the heel. These oxfords stay by her even if she goes in for Spanish fandangos.

Floppy Brims on Tea Hats.

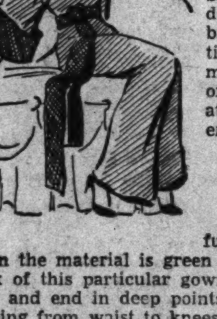
Five o'clock tea hats, so frivolous that they can scarcely be termed hats, add a bit of subtle sophistication to tea dances. Sorority girls and debutantes will need only a glimpse of their diaphanous brims to realize their possibilities. Eyes are never more luminous or provocative than when they look up through a floppy, transparent brim.

An adorable black velvet one has crushed velvet encircling its net crown. Stiff veiling makes the four-inch brim, which may be pulled into dips and ripples, to suit the wearer's face. Other black 5 o'clock tea hats have narrow gold and silver bands swirling on crowns and outlining brims.

Those who prefer the candid to the provocative may have a crochet-mesh coronet which resembles a fairy princess' crown. This half-brim affair has a narrow elastic band to hold it in place. Push the coronet far back on the head, halo fashion. It will give the eyes a youthful, ingenuous look.

Scarlet Velvet Highlights Gray Crepe.

The ecclesiastical influence is at its picturesque best in formal monk pajamas. Gray, rough crepe seems particularly appropriate for the simple, long lines of this alluring costume. The lovely, soft gray is dramatically high-lighted with wide bands of black and scarlet transparent velvet.



The high cowl front has a touch of the flaming scarlet at the throat. Scarlet bands, four inches wide, make cuffs on kimona sleeves with waist-deep armholes.

The cowl, ending in a point just above the waistline, terminates in wide, square revers in back. A wide red sash crosses over a black one to form a surplice line below the deep, square-cut back. The slashes are brought to the center front where they are tied in a loose knot, similar to the cord on a monk's robe. A wide strap across the back of the neck keeps the pajamas from slipping at the shoulder. The trousers are full enough to simulate a skirt.

The price is $29.75.

Kolinsky on Green and Gold Lame.

The ankle-length afternoon gown beautifully exemplifies the elegant mode, especially when the material is green and gold lame. Kolinsky outlines the boat neck of this particular gown. Dolman sleeves are tucked at the armhole and end in deep points over the hands. Wide vertical tucks, extending from waist to knees, release fullness in back. Above the tucks the back is slashed from Kolinsky band to the waist. A sash sweeps across the front and ties on the left side.

Price, $82.50.

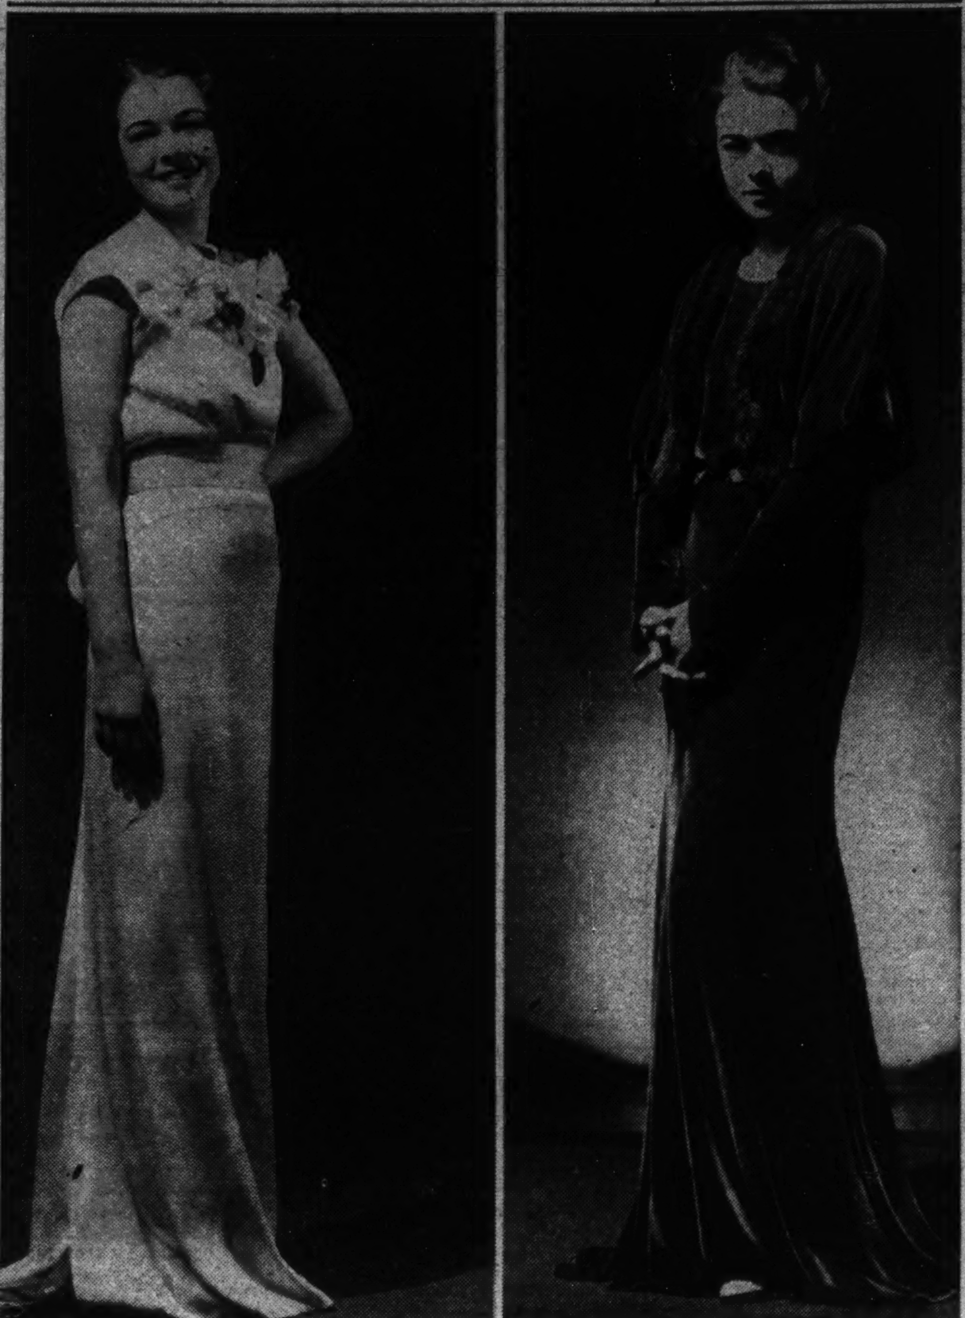
Rain Shield Is Made Big Enough for Cape

A firm famous for its dress shields decided to break from the old traditions and make a shield large enough for a rain cape. They called them Hollywood or something equally hot for bait, and promptly threw them about the shoulders of the Worlds Fair crowds when even the elements failed to cooperate with the ticket taker. Tons of these rain shields are selling in New York now in notion departments at 84 cents per copy, and they really aren't a bad means at all of defying mild attacks of the weather's hypocrisy. Of light rubber like a bathing cap, they wad into a small nothing when the clouds blow over.

There's Harmony in Every Line



Glistening white satin bengaline creates an evening gown whose subtle sophistication belies the forthrightness of its color. The enormous gardenias massed at the throat exemplify one of Fashion's happiest arrangements of flowers for the formal mode. The gown's back is cut square and extremely low. The short train of the long, flowing skirt has fascinating tango splits.

Medieval sleeves add a picturesque note to a chartreuse velvet symphony. Kolinsky outlines the separate jacket, cut on bolero lines. When the jacket is removed a daring back decolletage and softly bloused bodice are revealed. The train is sufficiently long to form graceful patterns as the wearer walks.

Photographed especially for The Post by C. O. Cunningham from models at Jelleff's and Phillipsborn's.

New Weight Popularizes Fabrics of Tweed Type

Tweedy-looking fabrics are rapidly becoming the favorite of the smartly dressed woman. There's none of that "British heavies" look about the chic ones, however. There was a time, you remember, when all you got for showing your rural love of autumn in tweeds was a backache and chance to fall on your face from the load.

You may now skip after your share of the hickory nuts in beige, navy and red checks that have all the warmth and appearance of the early school, but none of the weight. Buy your great coat first, preferably with detachable fur collar, then match its pattern or coloring with skirt and jacket suit, plus sweater, plus silk blouse. There's an outfit! And warm enough for watching all the quarter backs in the world do their stuff.

Matching jackets of lame gowns have shirred detail on sleeves and twists and drapes at necklines. Fur is also an effective trimming for jackets of this type.

Personality Is Expressed in Original Coiffures

Loveliness seems to be going to women's heads. The beauty spotlight is focused on the hair. Coiffures come in for more than their share of glamour. For evening wear there is no end of artistic detail, elegant effects, wispy ringlets. For daytime more practical arrangements, large, flattering waves that linger long. For all time individuality! This highly specialized age and modern hairdressing artists make possible the expression of one's personality in a truly original coiffure. The hairdressing expert starts creating a coiffure by studying the face features and type of the individual before him. Next he summons his trusty scissors to snip and shape the hair to the contour of the head, to fall into soft lines. Then comes the wave. Paradoxically enough it is just a shadow of a wave, yet it lasts as long as the very tight artificial looking one of the past. Even for formal functions, the coiffure should be more than merely decorative.

Fur Coats Designed In Medium Lengths

New Trotteur Models Suit Boyish Figures.

Women have a way of getting what they want. When they demanded fur coats in trotteur length, the designers got busy and turned out some extremely dashing models. These coats that are neither long nor short are especially suited to the youthful, boyish figure.

This season's versions include straight, belted or swagger types. Some have yokes. Collars are standing, Peter Pan or cravat. Sleeves relate the story that has been going the rounds this year: Pleats or shirring at the shoulders, fullness below the elbow.

Short-haired furs, such as lapin, galyak and kid are the happiest choices for the fur trotteur that is belted or swagger. Seal and krimmer make handsome straightline finger-tip length coats.

Taffeta Scarf Ready to Make Fashion Entry

Crisp and Fresh, in Rich Colors, They Brighten Costume.

Taffeta scarfs are breathlessly awaiting their cue in the wings of fashion's stage. When women catch a glimpse of their fresh crispness, these scarfs will undoubtedly be promoted from the extra ranks to feature roles. For one thing, they're so decidedly different from the wooly, crepey and knitted, things that have encircled feminine throats for lo, these many seasons.

The colors are rich and glowing, in stripe effects for the most part. Heavily banded arrangements, as well as group stripes, are manipulated in interesting and novel fashions.

The designs range from the Ascot and bow scarfs to 'kerchief and monk types. Any of them add zest to a dark daytime costume.

One firm has made 18-inch taffetas in a delightful reproduction of soft, fine French material and French striped patterns. But newest of all is a group of miniature Scotch clan plaids in yarn-dyed surah.

Schiffli gold and silver embroidery is used on plain and satin striped taffeta in scallop, line and diamond patterns. Candy stripes in new, subtle color combinations are also good for the taffeta scarf.

Parisians Dictate To Dress Clients

Claim Many Forget Lines, Color Should Blend.

Paris (U.P.).—If it were a mere matter of selecting one of the prevailing colors, lines and fabrics of the season and then going ahead and telling some good dressmaker to make you a costume—life would be fairly rosy, sartorially speaking.

But—the thing so many folks forget is that the color, the line, or the fabric, of their choice may not, in any way, be one that would fit their style of beauty.

Time and again expert saleswomen flatly refuse to give one of their best clients a certain outfit. Sometimes there is almost a knockdown, drag-out fight about it, but if the woman is smart she will let the saleswoman have her way.

The house knows that if a customer is dissatisfied with a frock because it doesn't look right on her that forever after the customer will have an illfeeling toward the establishment. She complains that when she goes to that sort of a house and pays the price asked for perfect workmanship, she ought to get the expert advice which these houses specialize in.

Subdeb's Dresses Rival Big Sister's

Shops Show New Designs Expressly for Her.

Vibrant coats, suits and dresses have been made this season for the subdeb. With her shirtwaist dress, floor-length evening wrap, and "hostess" gown, she needn't take a back seat when big sister is around.

Evening wraps designed especially for her include a white bengaline mandarin coat with jade dragon buttons and a long, black velvet with white fur puffs on the upper part of the sleeves.

An unusual laced treatment marks the neck of a black silk frock. The lacing is spaced to give a shirred, soft drape to the neckline. Other dresses for the jeune fille are accented with ruffs and draped crew collars.

Her evening frocks comprise a velvet creation with flowers clustered at the throat, and one with white ribbed metal cloth top and black skirt.

Vocabulary of Mode Adds Color Words

Palissandre, Venetian and Imperial Are Among New Shades.

The recent midseason showings in Paris added an imposing list of new words to fashion's vocabulary. The designers, after racking their brains for fascinating names to bestow upon their latest colors, have hit upon palissandre as another way of saying reddish brown, and saffron as a new term for the familiar bois de rose.

"Venetian" is a warm glowing pink, shot with gold. "Imperial" is a bright butterfly yellow. "Plover's egg" designates a light, slightly greenish blue. "Jeune Pousse" is the name of a bright, bud green, reminiscent of emerald.

Colors retained for the new season include raspberry and dahlia shades, gray mixtures, pale string, dark green, and gold.

Casualness in Disguise Tempers Formal Modes

Casualness, in clever disguise, often tempers the formality of the elegant mode. Gold and silver cord girdles, looped in front, achieve the casual in thoroughly delightful fashion. Afternoon and evening gowns assume a Moyen Age picturesqueness when these girdles encircle them at the natural waistline. Black, ruby, blackberry, emerald or bottle green velvet makes a stunning contrast to the gold or silver cord.

Backspin of Fashion Raises Old Lace to Popular Favor

Heirlooms of Fur From Grandmother's Day Also Are Unpacked After Long Neglect to Adorn Gowns for Formal Wear.

Luxurious fur and mellow old lace give the proper note of elegance to the formal costumes of the hour whether they be for a luncheon, an afternoon reception or dinner or dance. Treasure chests of old laces and bits of fur are being rifled these days to decorate the modern debuntante's costumes.

Of course it is possible to buy lovely lace and fur in the shops. No new lace ever had the subtle allure of that laid away in tissue paper and delicately perfumed with lavender. A bit of rare lace tucked into the sleeves and neck of a velvet afternoon dress gives it an air of dignity and sophistication dear to the heart of the youngest debutante.

Gown of Satin and Ermine.

One of the leading debuntantes of the season is carefully saving for her first ball a veritable princess dress of white crepe satin, made on long unbroken princess lines, with a drop shoulder effect outlined by an ermine bertha and with a deep band of ermine marking the hem of the skirt and extending to the long pointed train. To make the picture complete there is a long-fitted coat of white satin with a high ermine collar and deep-to-the-elbow gauntlet cuffs of ermine. The collar is so full and high that it can be drawn hoodlike over the fair wearer's head.

The tendency to slenderize which is inherent in the tunic dress has made its revival popular this season among all types of women. It enhances the slenderness of the lines of the tall, willowy figure and seems to take away much of the "dumpy" effect of the short, plump figure. The "in betweens," to use a shop term, wear this type of dress because it is "smart."

Those who wish to do their Christmas shopping early will find a solution for many of their problems in the vogue for little hats and scarfs that match. The hats—berets or "tams"—of knitted material or cloth can be chosen of the exact favorite shade of the person to whom it is to be given. Those who like to make their Christmas presents themselves will be able to give the little "twists" to these hats and scarfs in the making that will fit in with the personality of the woman or girl for whom they are intended and thus give a more personal touch to their Christmas giving.

The vogue for tweed costumes for every-day wear is seen in the choice of a daytime costume by Countess Cassilles. This is a very deep brick tweed flecked with brown. The coat has a high raccoon collar. The sleeves are fitted to the elbow and are rather large at the armhole. The skirt, of course, is plain and the blouse is silk of a color exactly matching the deep brick in the material. With this Countess Cassilles wears a dark brown brushed felt hat with a band of brick-red feathers on it.

Another smart street costume is being worn by Miss Helen Wardman. The dress is of dark brown wool, made in coat effect. With this she wears a mink cape, coming just to the waistline and fastening "bib-like" in back. Her hat is of brown wool with a high-peaked crown.

Piquant Anne Smith, granddaughter of Mrs. Henry V. Butler, wife of Admiral Butler, looks very smart in a dress of black satin crepe with a dash of red showing in the lining of the scarf collar. With this she wears a black coat with a black fur collar. At an evening party Miss Smith had on a dress of white chiffon, made with drop shoulder lines and very long skirt with ruffles at the hem.

Gowns of Green and Red.

Miss Anne Simpson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Simpson, looked very pretty at one of the recent dances in a dress of red crepe made very long and close-fitting. At a luncheon Miss Simpson had on a dress of black crepe faced in white. With this she wore a black coat with a high fur collar. Her hat was of black brushed felt.

Mrs. Wilbur Carr, wife of the Undersecretary of State, is wearing a very smart evening gown of green satin. This is made with a drape to one shoulder bodice and a long fitted skirt portion which falls in a train in the back.

Senora de Espil, wife of the Ambassador of Argentina, wore at a recent dinner a gown of heavy black silk with the bodice very heavily embroidered in white and silver beads.

Mme. Peter, wife of the Minister of Switzerland, is wearing a black evening gown with the light effect of the bodice so fashionable at this time achieved by embroidery of rhinestones and pearls.

Historical Ties Attract Hundreds of American Travelers to Cruise in West Indies

Tropical Eden Rich in Lore Dating From Columbus' Time

Procession of Romantic Figures, From Capt. Kidd to Panama Canal Builders, Has Left Imprint on Luxuriant Caribbean.

The America of today had its origin in the West Indies and probably that explains why so many people from the United States like to visit the islands of the Caribbean.

To most people the whole region of the beautiful Caribbean Sea savors of enchantment. It is the fairyland, the paradise of the western world. Here begin romance on this hemisphere. It thrived for hundreds of years, and left interesting marks and relics that the people of today are eager to see. It is America's land of sunshine and flowers when the winter storms blow the snow through the streets and fields of the ever-busy United States, and its soft call is one that is hard to resist, coming as it does from silvery seas that wash the palm-fringed shores of emerald islands basking beneath the bluest of skies.

The mere mention of the West Indies brings to mind a flood of recollections—pictures of Columbus, De Leon, De Soto, Cortez, Balboa, Pizarro, Drake, Morgan, Raleigh, Nelson, Abercrombie, Rodney and Empress Josephine, the West Indian wife of Napoleon. The stories read in youth of these and many other celebrities who have brightened or darkened history's pages, to say nothing of the bold pirates who immortalized the Spanish Main, naturally lead to a desire to view the places made famous by these remarkable characters.

Havana Gay Amid Turmoil.

Every West Indies cruise stops at Havana, either outward or homeward bound. Paris of the western world, where history is even now in the making, Havana boasts a magnificant Prado, an avenue running for 2 miles down to the sea where it joins the Malecon. In the byways are dim, cool streets, old Spanish buildings and splashes of brilliant tropical colors in the lovely trees and flowers. Havana for all her political unrest, remains a city of zest and festivity, and her National Casino, bathing beach and race tracks aid in combining a rare old atmosphere with modernity at its height.

Nassau, beloved by all travelers to the West Indies, is a place of eternal bud and bloom. The weather is perfect the whole year round. Many persons get their sun tan at Paradise Beach.

Bermuda is one of the world's beauty spots. Coral islands covered with cedar trees, it is the Atlantic's emerald gem. Passengers go ashore at Hamilton, the capital, beautifully situated on a large lagoon. From this town a railroad conveys the visitors in a short time to any part of the islands. A favorite bathing place is Elbow Beach, while the romantically inclined will want to visit the ruins of the home of Nea, whom Tom Moore fell in love with while he was stationed in St. George's, and about whom he wrote the immortal song, "Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms."

Vespucci's Port of Rest.

Port of Spain, from which town the roads lead to all parts of Trinidad, the Caribs called the Island Iere, or the Land of Hummingbirds. Amerigo Vespucci rested here on the voyage during which he discovered Venezuela. Raleigh made it his military base. Rev. Charles Kingsley wrote several books here. He called it "Sweet isle of the west."

La Guaira is the port from which Caracas, capital of Venezuela, is reached. The city lies high in the mountains, and though but 4 miles from the port it requires 23 miles of serpentine railroad to reach it. Views from the train windows are magnificant Simon Bolivar, liberator of South America, lived in Caracas.

Curacao is the island which supplies the main ingredient of a drink of that name to the world. The extract comes from the bitter oranges that grow here. The drink is manufactured in Holland and distributed from there. The cactus attains great height here, where rain is scarce and sand is plentiful.

Canal Defense Base.

Colon is one of the liveliest of tropical cities. The night life displays all the wild abandon of the tropics. From here the railroad leads along the Panama Canal to the City of Panama on the Pacific Coast. This is a paradise for the souvenir hunter. The treasures of the Indies may be bought for a song. In old Panama may be seen part of the ruins created by Henry Morgan when he sacked and burned the city.

St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, was once called the Gibraltar of America and now holds a new military interest, as it virtually commands one sea approach to the Panama Canal. St. Thomas is the home of the bay rum industry, but the trees grow on a neighboring island. Here the work of coaling steamers is done by women, each one carrying a basket of coal nicely balanced upon her head.

Dominica is the loftiest of the Caribbees. Here dwell the last of Caribs, the aborigines of the Antilles, once fierce cannibals, but now mild-mannered, peaceful people. It was off these shores that Rodney defeated De Grasse in 1782. Dominica is the greatest lime-producing country in the world. Roseau is the main port and capital.

The Empress Josephine's Home.

Fort de France is the seaport and chief city of Martinique. Notably historic is the great fortress, from the parapet of which may be seen the plantation of La Pagerie, where the Empress Josephine was born. A beautiful statue of her, carved in white marble, is one of the popular sights in Fort de France. St. Pierre was destroyed by earthquake in 1902. Mount Pelee and the ruins of the once beautiful and happy city still interest the traveler.

Grenada is the home of the nutmeg, for some years in disuse, but now ready to ride the high wave of popularity again. Cacao, which produces the cocoa beans from which chocolate is made, grows to perfection here. It is the island's leading industry.

Kingston is in Jamaica, the only island in the Caribbean where English is widely spoken. It was discovered by the Spanish and taken from them by the British in 1655. It is to this day a British colony. Jamaica is a mountainous land with hundreds of rivers and streams rushing down into the sea. These mountains aided the piratical escapades of Henry Morgan, Teach, Blackbeard and Capt. Kidd.

Sea Swallowed Entire City.

Here in Jamaica you may hear daily whispers about the celebrated Port Royal. On June 6, 1692, an earthquake caused the City of Port Royal, with its 3,000 homes, its cathedrals, its people and its treasures, to slip into the sea and to be seen no more. On clear, balm days, natives say, the coral-incrusted ruins of the old city can be seen beneath the waters.

Jamaica is a beautiful island of springs and streams. There are numerous hot and thermal springs. The warm salt spring at Milk River is probably the most remarkable of its kind in the world. As a winter resort Jamaica has no peer. It is undoubtedly the most magnetic point in all the enchanting islands of the fascinating West Indies. The natural scenery is wonderful. Some of the peaks are more than 5,000 feet high. Montego Bay and Kingston are the ports of call in Jamaica.

Barbados is the only foreign country ever visited by Gen. George Washington. He went there in 1751 with his brother Lawrence, who was in search of health. The island, lying far out in the Atlantic, is the easternmost of the Caribbees. It presents every variety of scenery—hills, valleys, broad plains and rugged rocks. Bridgetown is the port and main city. The town was once the headquarters of Lord Nelson, the great sea fighter who won immortality in the battle of Trafalgar. The house occupied by Washington still stands.

Panama Rich in History.

Panama is that little neck of land so brimming with history—where gold caravans toiled through the jungle from the Pacific to the Atlantic, laden with yellow metal bound for Spain. Here the French were defeated in their attempts to make a waterway from sea to sea; here finally the powerful forces of nature were conquered and the Panama Canal stands, a monument to American ingenuity and courage, where today the ships of every nation pass in endless pageant.

The famous shops of Panama are a veritable shoppers' paradise.

A cruise to the West Indies may be aptly called a miniature cruise around the world. Spain, France, England, Holland—all are well represented in their native settings. A seething mixture of all races of the world is found and their glamour and charm are never-ceasing, even to those travelers who have had the good fortune to visit them.

No passports are required of persons who embark cruising the West Indies.

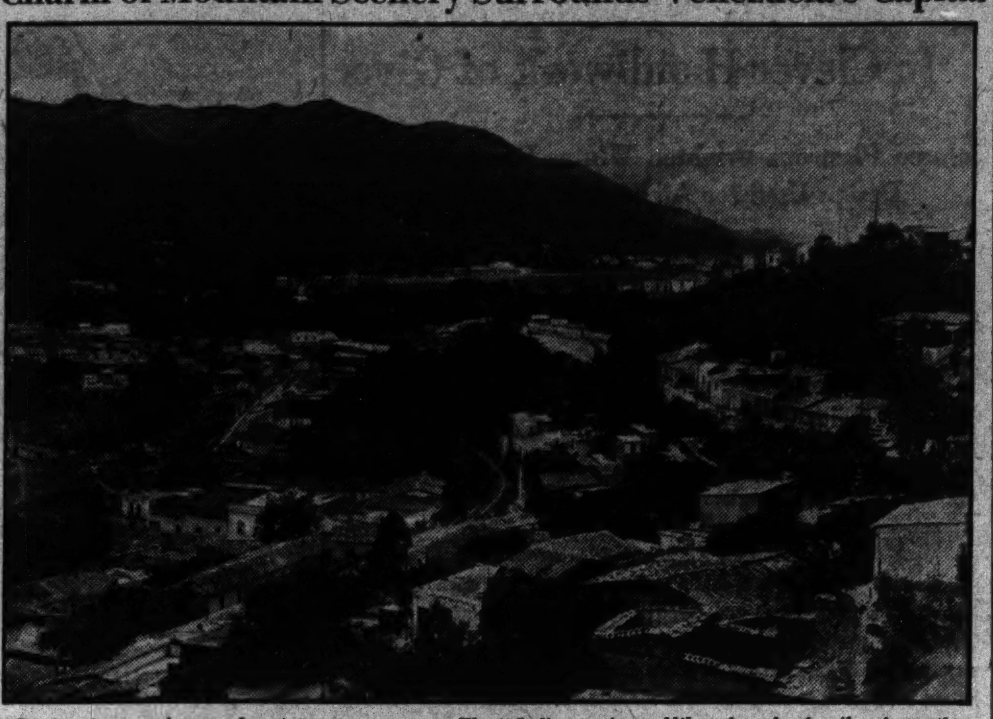
Cathedral Chapter.

The worthy grand matron and the worthy grand patron, accompanied by the other officers of the Grand Chapter, O. E. S., paid to Cathedral Chapter, No. 14, their annual grand visitation last Wednesday evening.

Mrs. Jessie S. Bradley, chairman, presented a program depicting scenes from the Century of Progress. Gifts of silver were brought from the "enchanted island" and presented to the grand matron and grand patron by the past matron, Miss Alice Taylor, who escorted the visitors on the tour. Solos were sung by Past Matron Ethel Martin and Miss Adelaide Watson.

Charm of Mountain Scenery Surrounds Venezuela's Capital



Caracas is one of many beauty spots seen on a West Indies cruise. Although only 4 miles from the port, La Guaira, a journey of 23 miles up the mountain is necessary to reach it. Views from the train windows are magnificent, and the trip is one which well repays the visitor for his efforts.

Public Wonders About Prices Of 1934 Cars; Makers Do, Too

Factory Owners So Far Know Little About New Deal Cost.

By William Ullman.

For what level are motor-car prices headed when the new models appear in the next few weeks?

Those who must buy new cars wish they knew. So do those who manufacture automobiles for, surprising though it may be, the price problem has the motor magnate quite as baffled and confused as it has the public.

The universal assumption is that prices are going to be increased. But, by how much? And what additional features are going to be added, the cost of which may make the new model of greater dollar value than the last one?

Cost analysis figures of one of the most thorough-going units of the industry show that, in the case of the largest seller among popular-priced passenger cars, labor costs alone have increased $21 per car in three months. That is the result of adding men, reducing hours and increasing pay rates.

Tangle in Yearly Basis.

The manufacturer in question favors the New Deal. His analysis merely is aimed at determining its cost with the idea of pricing his product accordingly. He has yet to determine the rate of increase in material costs per car.

The cost analysis and determination of production expense per car for the 1934 models will not solve the manufacturers' problem. His prices are based upon an entire year's production or, at least, upon an estimate of it, which greatly complicates the fixing of 1934 prices. If production reaches a sufficent quantity, the increased cost of labor and materials in an individual unit of his output can be absorbed by a small or, under some circumstances, no increase in price.

That means that if motorists buy automobiles in a large enough quantity in 1934, the prices they will have to pay may not be far different from those of the year now ending. The factory magnate has to figure out the prospects in this direction as well as analyze labor and material costs. He will have his new car ready before the price tag in many cases.

Court Knocks Out Auto Tax.

Those fighting for fairness in motor vehicle taxes are praising a decision of the State Supreme Court of Colorado.

The decision declared invalid a special fee assessed against car owners in addition to the regular registration fee and ranging from $2 to $60, depending upon the value of the car. Not even the acuteness of the economic emergency could justify the levying of a special property tax of such a discriminatory character, the court decreed.

200-Foot Vision for Safety.

Headlights that have sufficient power to disclose the presence of an object as large as an average man at a distance of 200 feet are required by law on all motor vehicles. Why?

The 200-feet specification is based upon the assumption that such a distance will be adequate for stopping a vehicle before it reaches the object revealed by the headlamps. It takes into consideration the driver's reaction time, average efficiency in the car's braking system, and the fact that the vehicle is unlikely to be traveling at a rate of more than 40 miles an hour.

It takes an engineer to point out some considerations with respect to body types that elude a large number of motorists. The matter of comfort and the close-coupled sedan provides an illustration. Many a prospective car buyer looks at the relatively compressed interior dimensions of this type of car and decides that it could not be comfortable. In this body style both seats are carried "within the wheelbase" of the car, which represents a maximum of comfort; more so than when the rear seat is directly above the rear axle.

Dimensions are not everything when it comes to estimating comfort.

$200,000,000 Motor Tax.

Winter's worst feature, from the standpoint of keeping the automobile in good condition, continues to be the product not of cold weather, but of low temperature plus bad driving.

The bad driving comes, as it always has, in the form of forcing the engine to move the car before it has reached a reasonable operating temperature. Thermostats, radiator shutters and a host of other mechanical devices have been created by designers to speed the warming-up process, but it still is far too slow for the patience of the average motorist.

Motor tax diversions in the 48 States are calculated this year at more than $200,000,000. That's about 30 per cent of the total which the States collect.

Dispassionate analysts estimate the truck has originated considerably more new business for the railroads than the 10 to 15 per cent it is said to have taken from them.

Travel Lecture Series Swings To West Indies

Island Authority to Show Films, Too, in Tuesday Evening Talk.

The West Indies will be the subject of the third in a series of 20 illustrated travel lectures to be given next Tuesday evening at 8:15 at the Masonic Auditorium.

The lectures are sponsored by the Washington Travel Guild in cooperation with The Washington Post and are designed to give Post readers the historical, geographical and social background of the various parts of the world from which the news of the day comes to The Post.

During recent years the West Indies have been a favored vacation spot for Americans who wish to enjoy a foreign atmosphere within convenient distance. As an additional feature of the lecture, appropriate apparel for the tourist will be demonstrated in a fashion parade of living models.

Illustrated by Films.

Tuesday's lecture will be supplemented by motion pictures which show the various interesting points on the islands, native life and the sports and pastimes that are available to the visitor. Mr. A. K. Dawson, authority on West Indies affairs and history, will deliver the lecture.

Chiefly known to the business world for their famous sugar plantations, the West Indies once were the prize for whose possession the maritime nations of Europe waged bitter strife. Their colonial aristocracy was the toast of Europe and the perfect synonym of wealth and luxury.

Mr. Dawson, in describing the charm of the islands, will give his audience a thrill that is second only to an actual sojourn beneath their tropic palms.

Other Lectures to Come.

Bermuda and the Treasure Islands of the Bahamas have been the subjects of two previous lectures, and on subsequent Tuesdays the various countries of Europe, South America, Egypt and Asia will be similarly described and illustrated.

To partially defray the cost of these exhibitions, a charge of 25 cents is made for each lecture. If reserved seats are desired, they may be obtained by purchasing tickets for the remaining travelogues of the series at the offices of the Ober Steamship and Tourist Agency, 1420 H street northwest, or at the Masonic Auditorium box office on lecture evenings.

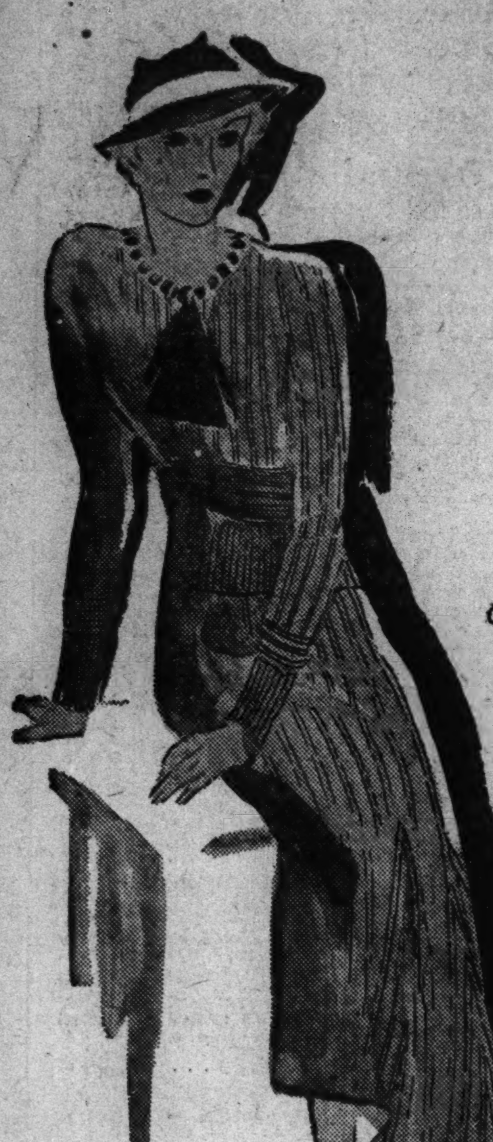
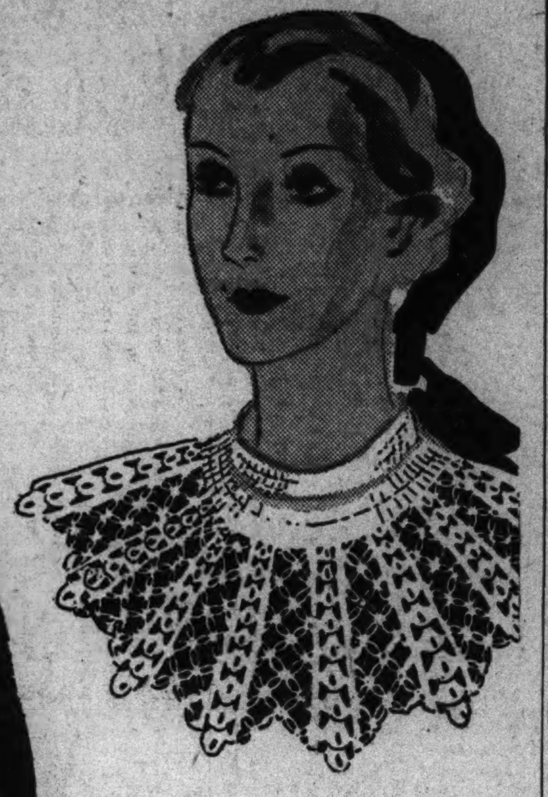
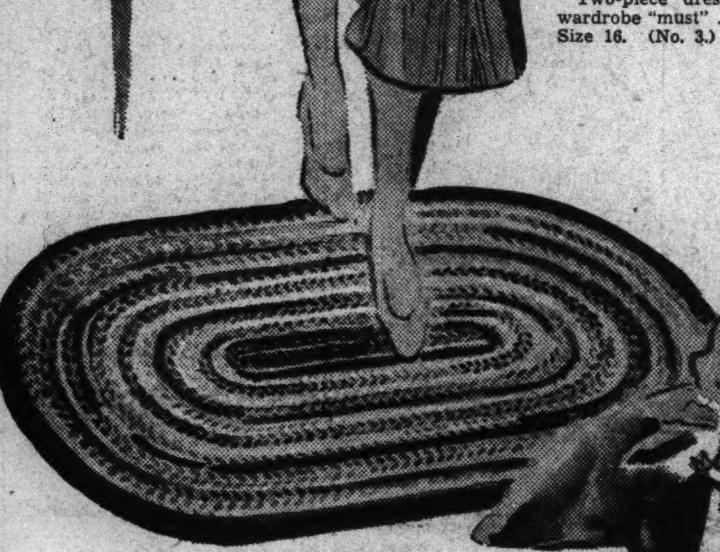
Gifts to Be Made at Home Range From Smart Knitted Dresses to Box Pillows



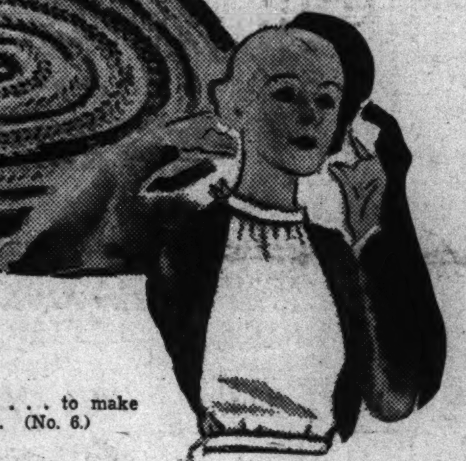
Two-piece dress . . . a smart wardrobe "must" . . . boucle knit. Size 16. (No. 3.)



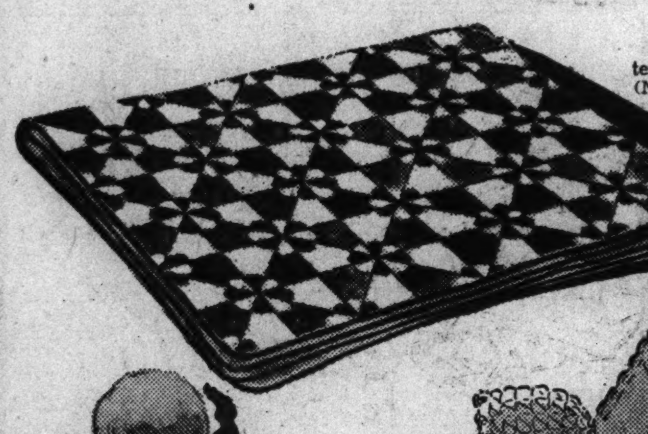
Crocheted collar . . . to pep up the dark dress . . . of cotton. (No. 4.)



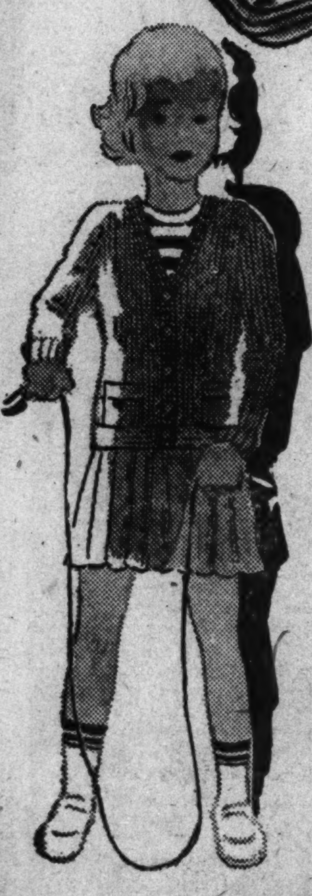
Crocheted rug . . . of crepe paper and wears like iron. (No. 5.)



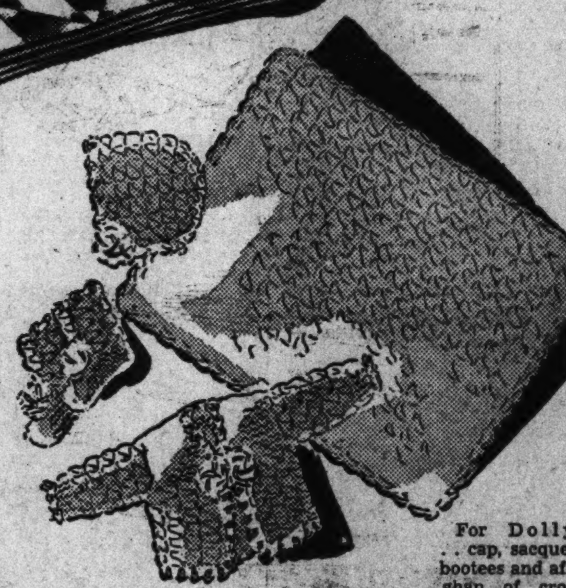
A smart plastron . . . to make any dress look new. (No. 6.)



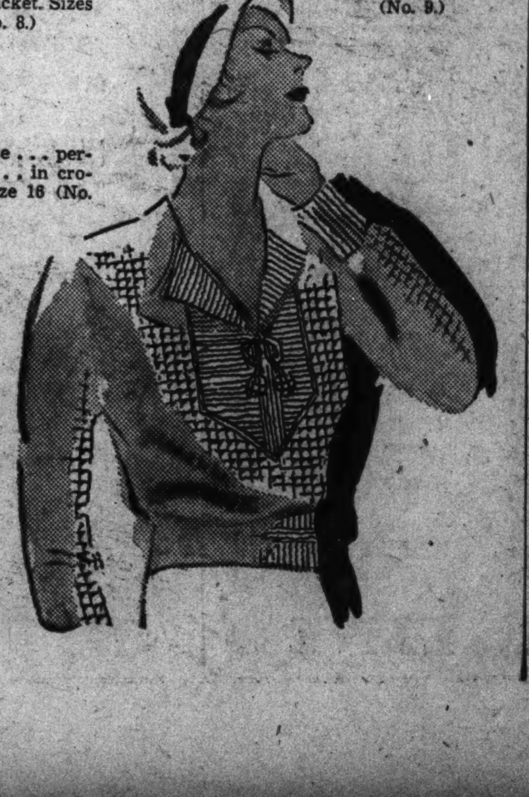
Quaker patchwork quilt . . . pattern and directions for making. (No. 7.)



Child's suit . . . knit wool skirt, sweater, jacket. Sizes 6, 8, 10 yrs. (No. 8.)



For Dolly . . . cap, sacque, bootees and afghan of crocheted wool. (No. 9.)



Tailored blouse . . . perfect for a suit . . . in crocheted wool. Size 16 (No. 10.)

Spirit of Christmas Expressed In Clever Handiwork of Giver

Colored Plastrons Brighten Winter Dresses; Basque Design Used for Afghan; Bag's Stripes Run Wild.

A hand-made Christmas gift used to mean one of those fancy be-ribboned doodads that had a positive genius for being useless. But that time is past. Now, while Aunt Molly sits before the fire and crochets a muffler for her favorite nephew, her debutante niece curls up near her and works industriously at the hooked rug she is making for her best friend.

More than likely the hooked rug is a crepe paper one. These new paper rugs, in clear bright colors, live to a ripe old age, and adopt a lamb-like submissiveness toward the scrub brush.

Ambitious Knitter Tackles Dress.

The ambitious knitter will find a happy outlet for her talents in a two-piece dress with a ribbon run through the youthful round neck. A rib stitch makes the wide cuffs and waistline belt. This dress would be extremely smart in raspberry, dull green or golden brown. If made of beige or light gray yarn, it could be worn far into the spring. We predict that the woman who makes this stunning boucle dress will have difficulty in parting with it.

For the college or business girl on the Christmas list, a crocheted collar is just the thing. It makes an old dress seem like a new one and is flattering to any type of face. This year collars are like silk stockings. No one can have too many of them.

A close relation of the separate collar is the plastron. It has all the virtues of the former as well as several on its own account. For one thing, it is much more unusual. It is also less casual and may be worn with afternoon and dinner dresses, while the crocheted collar is confined, more or less, to the daytime mode. A white or bright colored plastron would add a dramatic touch to a plain black dress. A beige or burnt orange one would bring out the latent beauty of a brown frock.

Colorful patchwork makes a quilt that could hold its own in any linen closet. All sorts of interesting color schemes can be worked out by the woman who has a flare for combining various shades. Blues with grays make a delectable quilt.

Knit Ensemble for the Tomboy.

The youngest member of the family will be thrilled to the core if Santa brings her a knit suit, consisting of skirt, slipover sweater, and cardigan jacket. Make the slipover in gay horizontal stripes and put yarn-covered buttons down the cardigan's front. This suit will stand lots of hard wear from an exuberant tomboy who spends after-school hours in outdoor romps.

Dolly's bisque body will be protected from scuffs and scars if she is snuggled into a crocheted wool sacque with matching cap and bootees. The little girl who receives this ensemble for her doll will also appreciate an afghan to cover the "baby" when it is lovingly put to bed.

Crocheted Blouse Adds Dash.

A crocheted tailored blouse with deep front yoke is a welcome change from silk or velvet ones. The crocheted model gives that delightful, careless English look to a suit that might otherwise be too obvious in its simplicity. Casualness with dash is the rare combination formed by a monotone tweed suit and a brilliant crocheted blouse. Do put a deep yoke in the blouse. It adds immeasurably to its good looks.

The woman who is interested in her home is a blessing at Christmas time. Select almost anything for her rooms and she will be vastly pleased. Even if she's frightfully particular, it's safe to give her a gay basque striped afghan, crocheted of light wool. It will come in handy on the chaise longue or about the shoulders when one is breakfasting in bed.

Cotton crocheted edgings, in colors as well as white, give a festive air to plain linen handkerchiefs. Some patterns are strong and sturdy, while others have a gossamer delicacy. Jolly sport hankies may be made by edging bright-colored linen with dark crocheted lace.

It's an easy step from making edging for handkerchiefs to crocheting wide bands of insertion for pillow slips. This style is coming back, according to those housewives who like fanciful bed linens.

Crocheted stripes running up and down and slithering off in curves makes a bag that is as distinctive as it is handsome. The semicircular shape gives a roominess that most bags don't possess. A crocheted wool strap, attached to a plain square top, makes it easy to carry this treasure. Those who prefer the underarm type may leave the strap off without spoiling the symmetry of the bag's lines.

Bedspread to Match Dressing Table.

If daughter is bringing her roommate home with her for the Christmas holidays she'll be grateful for such favors as a new skirt on her dressing table. A scalloped border at the top holds a full ruffle with shallow scallops at the bottom. There are numerous other ways of making the dressing table the attractive, frivolous thing it should be. Pleats give a tailored effect. Several ruffles heighten the feminine look.

If the tailored type is chosen, a corded bedspread makes a delightful companion piece. The bottom of the deep flounces may be scalloped to match the dressing table skirt.

Box pillows fit nicely into most any decorative scheme. Glistening black ones give an "arty" look to the studio-type room. Bright colored ones add a cheerful note to window seats in the library.

Woven bordered towels and mats also make attractive gifts for the homemaker.

Gold Jumps From Hills to Headlines

The Welcome Nugget, shown above magnified gigantically, is the largest ever found and gives an idea of what the world's monetary gold would look like melted into a single ingot. Such a mass of gold would occupy a space 31 by 31 by 31 feet.

GOLD in them thar hills there was, and is, and now there is gold even in the headlines of the daily newspaper.

Gold meets the eye on every front page.

In April, America went off the gold standard. Later there was a law against hoarding gold. Next, Uncle Sam offered to act as agent for the selling abroad of newly mined gold.

Climax of the gold situation came last month when President Roosevelt dramatically offered to buy newly mined gold direct, in the United States, fixing its price from time to time in an effort to control commodity prices. He also said he would buy and sell gold abroad, if necessary, and such purchases have been made.

With all this action, the Nation has become gold conscious.

Street sweepers lean on their broom-handles and discuss gold. Iron puddlers, the day's work done, dream of their own hard-surfaced metal turning into gold.

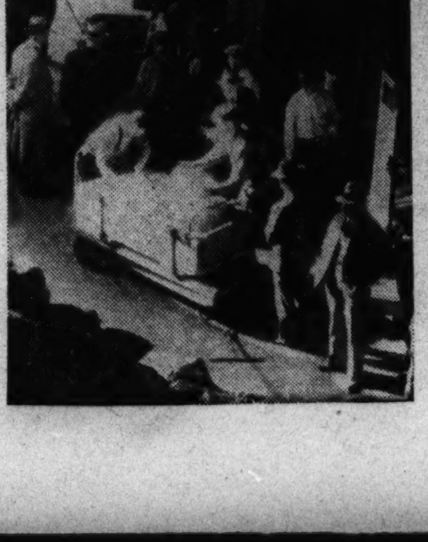
Economists rave on about gold. Clerks at the lunch hour figure out the gold content of the dollar.

Everybody Interested in Gold.

Boys are still looking for pots of gold at the end of the rainbow. Girls are collecting gold brooches. Babies cut their teeth on gold coins, hoarded.

It seems to be a craze.

Bankers, naturally, are interested in gold. So are gold miners and manufacturing jewelers.



But it seems that nowadays gold is everybody's concern—whether there is a scarcity or profusion of gold, an embargo on gold or a free market.

Gold, once rather an exclusive subject, to be bandied about only in bankers' clubs, now has about as much privacy as a gold fish.

It has come to the point where everybody is talking about gold. Books are being written on gold, have been written on gold, will be written on gold. That is, gold, the subject. Most of the books, of course, have gold bindings—befitting the subject.

Honest men of almost every trade and profession admit they know little about gold, except that it is a precious metal. Even security merchants and brokers throw up their hands when asked to explain gold; what it means to the average man, the man on the street.

Gold means, for the most part, a source of conversation—guided by the headlines again: Fifty Millions in Notes to Bolster Gold. Gold Market Spurts After Hearing Presidential Speech. Gold Hoarders Arrested in Boston.

Gold, the magic metal, influences every man, woman and child in the United States—in the world. Yet, about one in every million knows what it's all about.

How does gold affect the money in your pockets and mine? Why should the Nation be "all hopped up" over gold? Especially since the Government will not permit individuals to keep more than $100 in gold?

Really Pertinent Questions.

These are pertinent questions? These questions were asked of several distinguished students in the hope that a concrete answer might be obtained—an answer laid on the line.

In the words of an eminent student, "It's a long, long story."

Stripped of all its technicality, the tale goes somewhat like this:

Gold, as it affects economic life, primarily serves two purposes.

1. As a reserve for occasional redemption of money, but chiefly for the purpose of maintaining confidence in the Nation's credit and currency through establishment of strong central reserves.

2. To settle international balances.

That seems as simple as a nose on a man's face. It takes gold out of its romantic field, as ornamental adornment, and puts it into the hard, cold world of finance — where money talks.

If a country buys more abroad than it sells, or lends money abroad, or creates a situation where it has to pay abroad more than it receives from abroad, it pays in gold.

Gold thus is used not only in an individual government's dealings with its own people, but also in making payments between different countries.

A Universal Standard of Value.

Gold occupies a small amount of space. It resists heat and cold. It does not corrode. It resists acids—of all kinds. It is beautiful in appearance, a joy to the eye. It has the goods. Nothing has ever taken the place of gold in the monetary marts of the world since gold first came on the scene.

These, then, are the reasons for gold being what it is: A universal standard of value.

Even at the present moment, when most of the important nations are off the gold standard, gold is still the god. When nations went off the gold standard during the World War nobody paid much attention to it. By 1928 they had all gone back to the gold standard. France was among the last of the more important nations to return to gold. Then various countries began to slide off, but France and a few others still adhere to the gold standard.

Gold has been a basis of human trade as far back as history; but gold has been officially recognized only since the early part of the nineteenth century.

Before that, anything went, starting with the humble cowrie shell of the Antipodes. Nails were used as money in New England in pre-Revolutionary days—and shoe nails came back into use again in Germany, after the war, when the mark went below zero. Shoe nails were used in some of the villages, by the postmasters, as small change. At least, shoe nails had a real value when the mark had none.

Copper, silver and gold. Those are the three stages of monetary history. Copper came at the beginning of world trade. It became plentiful and its purchasing power decreased. Then came silver, two centuries before Caesar. For 2,000 years silver ruled—does still, in the Far East. Charlemagne's empire was established on a silver basis.

The gold rush of California in the year 1849 gave the world a new flood of gold. Incidentally, the nugget that started the California gold rush is over in the Smithsonian Institute.

Three years after the American Eldorado, gold was discovered in Australia. In 1885 another discovery was made in South Africa. America led all the gold-producing countries for a while, but now America stands third in the list. South Africa is first. Canada, second.

That gold will always maintain its supremacy as a precious metal is attested by Scott Turner, Director of the Bureau of Mines, who points out that about half of the metal mined since America was discovered has disappeared from the face of the earth—buried in graves, lost in ship wreckage at the bottom of the ocean.

The United States and France now hold between them more than seven billions of the eleven and one-half billions of monetary gold. Of that total, Uncle Sam has somewhere between four and four and a half billions.

Regal Tabbies Live in Swanky Falls Church Colony

Sleek Social Climbers Barred from Homes of Aristocrats.

By Louise Proctor Engle.

OUT on the Lee highway, a mile beyond Falls Church, an exclusive colony has been growing for two years under the poetic name of "Rosedere" and the management of wo women of rare achievements, the Misses Emma C. Payne and Dorothy Hunt. It is the largest cattery south of New York, this charming cluster of cottages atop a Virginia hill.

No sleek social climbers have ever pussy-footed into Rosedere. To gain a leasehold in one of its snug cottages, with roses rambling around the doorway and yard shaded by graceful maples, one must prove beyond question pure-bred descent from Persian feline forebears. Such impressive names as Don Claire, Hiawatha, Lavender Delphinium and Blue Kitty, all champions, are listed under Kitten Lane in the colony's social register.

If you have gone through life under the delusion that all cats are just cats, you are in for a shock at Rosedere. Those laboring under this fallacy are quickly converted by Miss Payne, who has been breeding prize Persians and making Washington cat-conscious since her arrival here in 1915 with Lady Frisky.

One swing around Rosedere's rustic lanes with Miss Payne, with stops at the white frame domiciles of some 50 residents, permissibly haughty in their handsome coats of fluffy blue, white, orange or cream—and you will belong to that superior clique that regards disdainfully folks who fail to register intelligence over such points as how long their kitten's paws should be, now broad her nose.

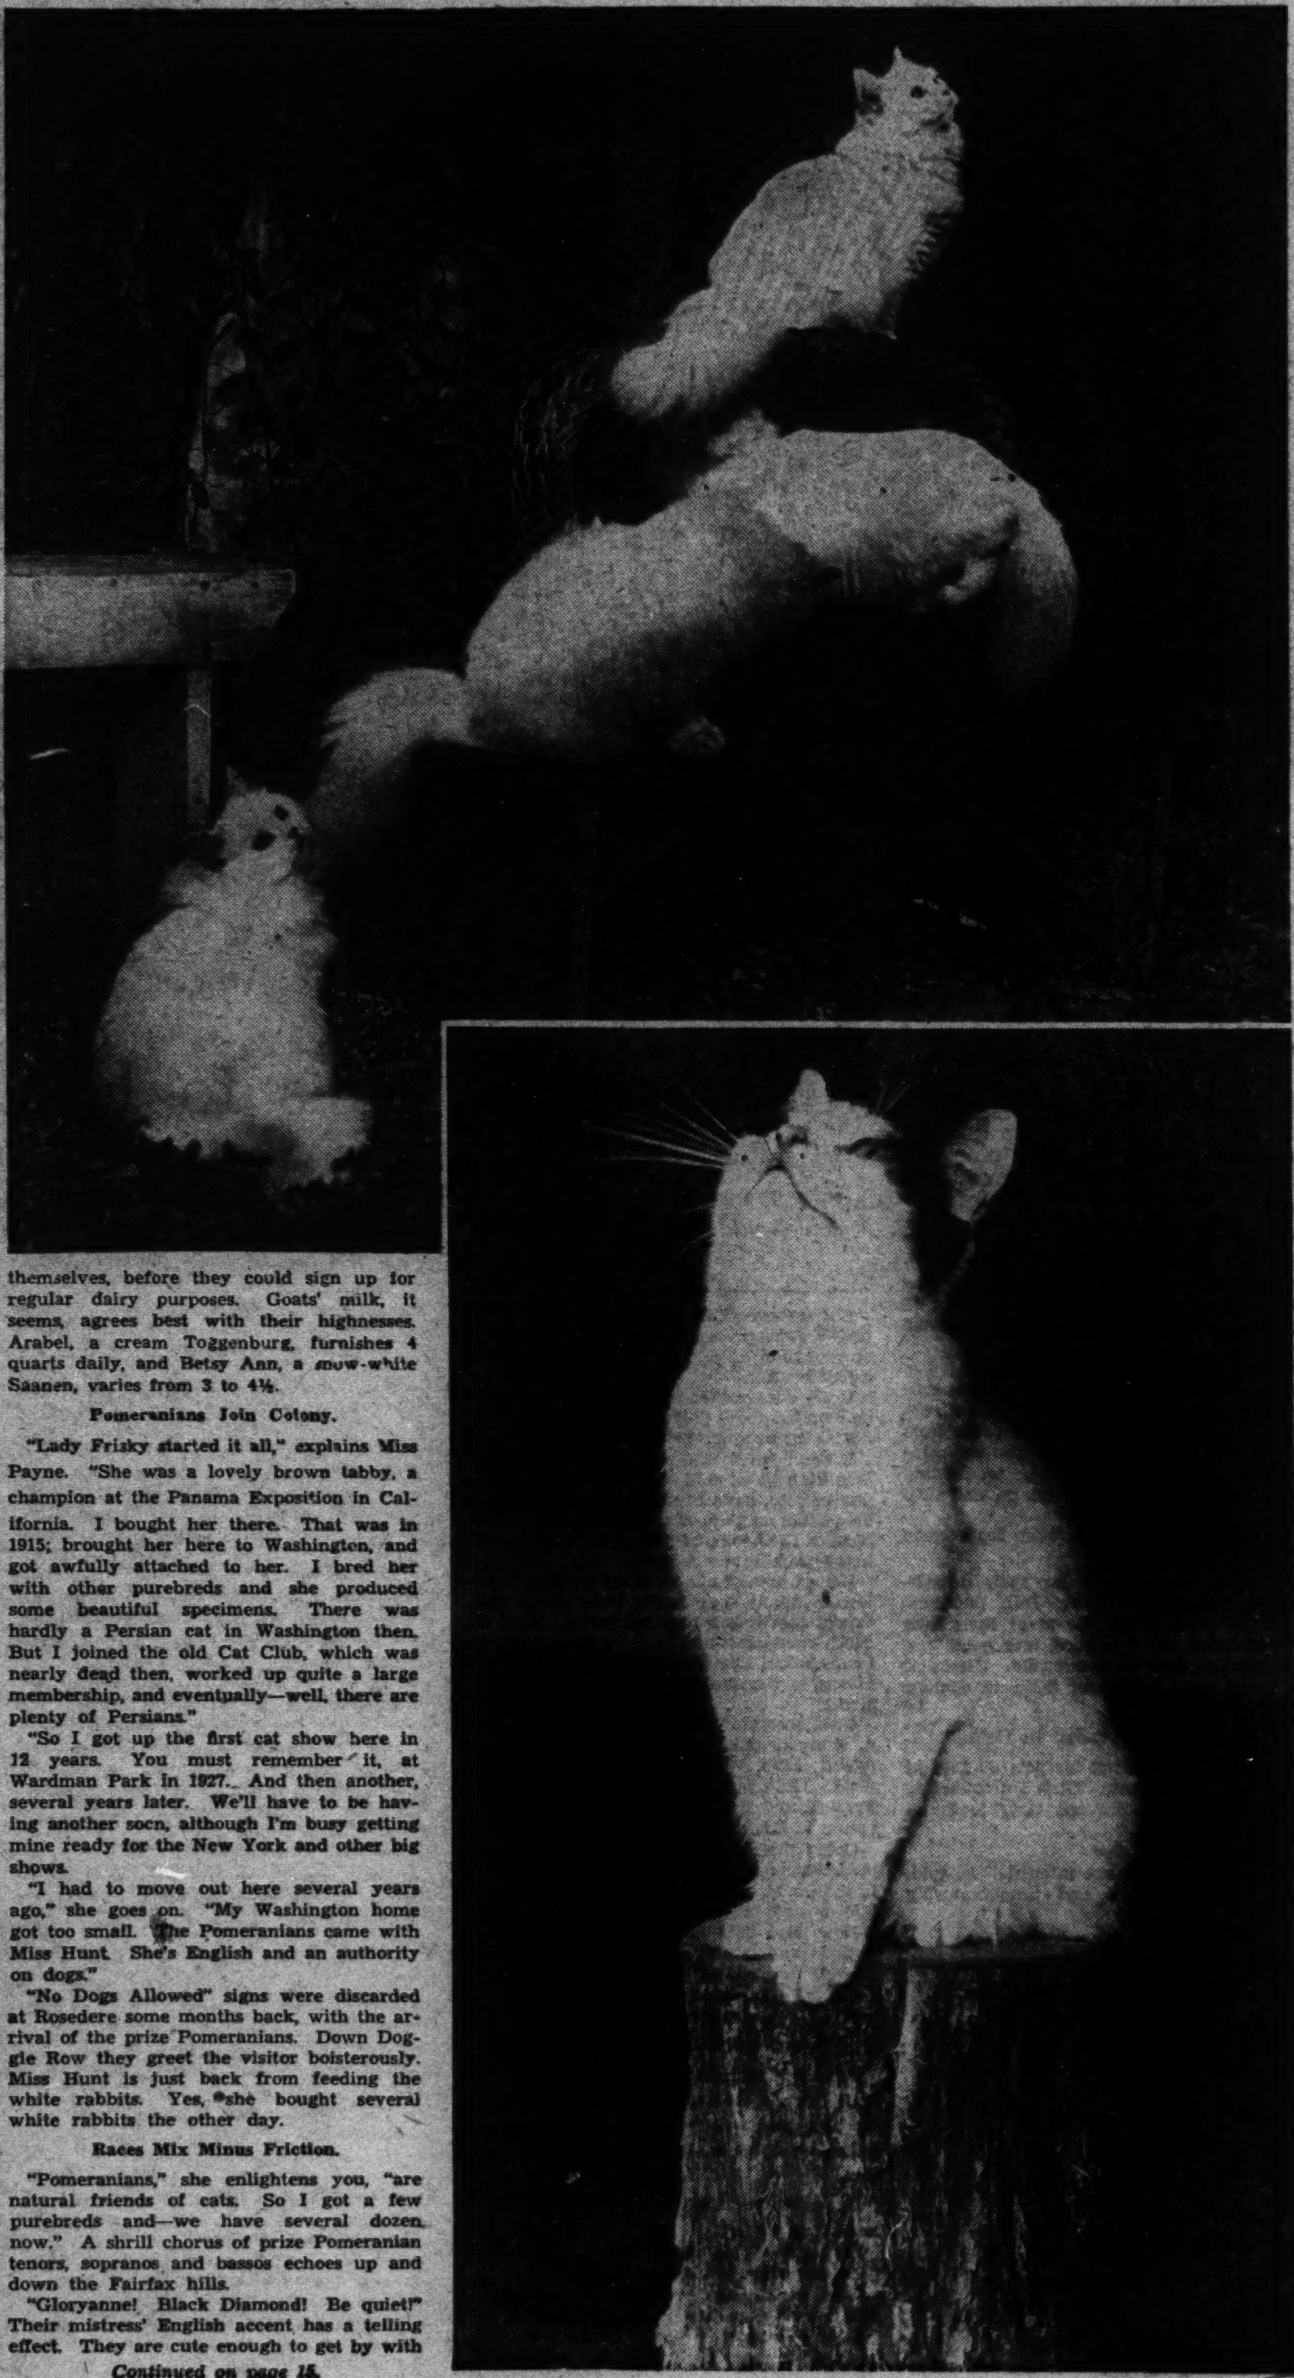
Man-Sized Cottages Used.

You will henceforth appreciate that your tabby's ears, of just such-and-such exterior proportions, should provide faultless hearing—not just so she can hear your dinner call two alleys away, but to win her a blue ribbon. And eventually, when she can rate so many blue ribbons for ears and paws and the best coloratura meow, she may become known as a champion.

This and many another kittenish idea you pick up on a visit in Rosedere. But if your tabby has not all the correct points, don't take her there. If she didn't pass right out, of inferiority complex, she would meow you out of all further peace, once you got her back home, until you had built her a cottage as big as your kitchen, with windows and doors, screens and awnings, roses climbing over a lattice outside, a runway with proper shade, and even a big brown wooden cat, nailed to the edge of the roof.

Miss Payne has, of course, with Miss Hart, who recently joined her, done more than this. For her increasing flock of past and future champions she has built a dozen or more man-sized cottages. No mere kennels among them, they range in size from a pantry to a large living room. Each is provided with inviting cribs or wall bunks, painted in rose or green, with screens and awnings against summer's heat, coal stoves for winter's blasts.

Quite an establishment caters to this royal tribe. Besides Miss Payne and Miss Hunt, who comb, feed and humor the guests under scientific rules, there is Liz, the hired girl, who keeps everything looking just right, and there are Arabel and Betsy Ann, who had to prove they were pure bred themselves, before they could sign up for regular dairy purposes. Goats' milk, it seems, agrees best with their highnesses. Arabel, a cream Toggenburg, furnishes 4 quarts daily, and Betsy Ann, a snow-white Saanen, varies from 3 to 4½.



Pomeranians Join Colony.

"Lady Frisky started it all," explains Miss Payne. "She was a lovely brown tabby, a champion at the Panama Exposition in California. I bought her there. That was in 1915; brought her here to Washington, and got awfully attached to her. I bred her with other purebreds and she produced some beautiful specimens. There was hardly a Persian cat in Washington then. But I joined the old Cat Club, which was nearly dead then, worked up quite a large membership, and eventually—well, there are plenty of Persians."

"So I got up the first cat show here in 12 years. You must remember it, at Wardman Park in 1927. And then another, several years later. We'll have to be having another socn, although I'm busy getting mine ready for the New York and other big shows.

"I had to move out here several years ago," she goes on. "My Washington home got too small. The Pomeranians came with Miss Hunt. She's English and an authority on dogs."

"No Dogs Allowed" signs were discarded at Rosedere some months back, with the arrival of the prize Pomeranians. Down Doggie Row they greet the visitor boisterously. Miss Hunt is just back from feeding the white rabbits. Yes, she bought several white rabbits the other day.

Races Mix Minus Friction.

"Pomeranians," she enlightens you, "are natural friends of cats. So I got a few purebreds and—we have several dozen now." A shrill chorus of prize Pomeranian tenors, sopranos and bassos echoes up and down the Fairfax hills.

"Gloryanne! Black Diamond! Be quiet!" Their mistress' English accent has a telling effect. They are cute enough to get by with

Ghosts of Czar's Horses Gallop in Embassy

Soviet Envoy May Find Old Mansion Clattering With Weird Hoofbeats

GHOSTLY steeds, galloping horses of the Czar, are on a rampage every night, disturbing a stately neighborhood.

Up and down and around they go at breakneck speed. They dash pell-mell through the corridors of the closed, darkened Russian Embassy.

Startled pedestrians, at the midnight hour, stop, listen and wonder as the stomping steeds break the wonted quiet of the area, dragging behind them an empty coach. It is the imperial victoria of the slain Czar of all the Russias, Nicholas II.

A headless driver sometimes holds the reins on the dashing chargers—six white stallions, high-bred Arabian horses.

At least this is the story being told around the embassy neighborhood since it is bruited about that a new Russian regime may take over the empty mansion.

In truth, there is some cause for the stories that are going about the town; that the Russian Embassy is a haunted house.

Col. Alex I. Krynitsky, custodian of the embassy, was at one time a member of the Imperial Guard doing duty at the Imperial Palace in old St. Petersburg, now Leningrad.

The colonel smiles when he hears stories of the Czar's horses. The colonel's son, John, a native American and a student at Central High School, thinks it all a grand hoax. Father and son know how the tales originate.

Weird Sounds in Embassy.

Weird sounds abound in the Russian Embassy. There is one room in particular called by young Krynitsky "The Creaking Room." Just why this room should creak so loud that its noises are heard next door, in the Racket Club, and sometimes out on the sidewalk, no one knows.

It may be that the building is groaning under the weight of its years.

For seventeen years the Russian Embassy has stood stark and bleak. No man or woman has passed through its majestic portals in all that time. Any person who has been inside in the seventeen years had to enter by the chancery doors—and these are guarded by the intrepid Col. Krynitsky and his wife, son and daughter.

Precious few people have had the rare privilege of seeing the inside of the Embassy since its last official occupant packed up and sought other quarters. A repair man, to fix the roof, a colored janitor to clean a wall, now and then. Only these, and the Colonel, and his family, have been inside—until a night not long ago when the State Department gave permission for photographers to take pictures.

Then was verified the tale of the Czar's horses. They were romping all over the place, even while the flood and flash lights chased somber shadows away.

Eerie noises permeate the Russian Embassy—startling thuds, strange sounds.

If and when the Soviet government sends an ambassador to open the embassy, that man will find he has a haunted house on his hands.

The legend dates back to the turn of the century. Then Mrs. George Pullman, wife of the sleeping-car magnate, decided to grace Washington society. At the outset Mrs. Pullman selected a site on Sixteenth street. On that site she determined to erect a house that would embody the last word in magnificence. It stands there now, a shadow of its former self, a great, gaunt building, empty and dust-laden, with the czar's horses dashing through its vacuum-like interior.

Money was no object in the building of this mansion; magnificence was desired and the architect and builders were told to spare no expense. The result was a dream.

When the building was finished Mrs. Pullman's path was crossed by a gypsy woman. She told Mrs. Pullman's fortune. Therein is the cause of a present-day effect.

Had not the gypsy woman told a tale of foreboding disaster the Russian Embassy would never have been the Russian Embassy, and the czar's horses would not now be dashing through its spacious corridors.

It seems, from authenticated sources, that the gypsy told Mrs. Pullman grave disaster would befall her if she ever lived in the Sixteenth street house. True or not, Mrs. Pullman never occupied the mansion.

Col. Krynitsky, the custodian, has heard this story. So have others. It accounts, in some way, for the mystery now involving the mansion.

It is true, also, that before Mrs. Pullman sold the house to John Hays Hammond, who afterward sold it to the Russian Imperial Government, the house was offered as a gift to Mrs. Pullman's daughter.

Bought as Czar's Embassy.

Mrs. Pullman's daughter had married a rising young politician, then in Congress. He was slated for a Senatorship; but he never went after the toga, preferring another avenue to fame. He is the celebrated former Gov. Frank O. Lowden, of Illinois, who once made a bid for the Presidency.

Since the Lowdens had no use for the Sixteenth street mansion, it found its way eventually into the hands of the Czar—to be used as an embassy, occupied by the aristocracy of Russia. There is probably in all Washington no such sample of lavishness as this, the haunted house on Sixteenth street.

If the Czar's horses are galloping around inside this mansion they are treading some of the finest floors in Washington—floors now covered with a heavy coating of oily dust—grimy, dirty, abhorrent. Overhead the glories of another day are preserved, but under foot there is the sensation of walking on a cinder path.

Sixteenth street, since the glamour of the Romanoffs faded with the fall of the imperial dynasty, has changed a lot. In the days of the old Russian Embassy there was not much traffic where the embassy stands in the heart of the old residential section. An occasional automobile wended its way between horse-drawn carriages.

Now all is confusion. Traffic is a menace on Sixteenth street. This accounts, in a way, for the dirt that spreads itself all over the floors of the mansion where the Czar's horses are supposed to cavort. If they are actually racing through the mansion they are prancing on a soil made up of little pieces of rubber tires that have sifted through the closed windows. These infinitesimal dust particles of rubber, worn from the thousands of tires that pass the door of the embassy each day, are laid evenly over the floors where once danced the silken and satin shoes of the belles of the ball.

Real Heartbreak House.

Heartbreak House is actually the name of the Russian Embassy. While the sound of horses' hoofs may be heard by the neighborhood, an attuned ear can hear also the soft glide of ballroom slippers, the swish of silken skirts and lambent lingerie.

In its hey-day the Russian Embassy was among the outstanding of the social centers. Representing the wealthiest court in the world, entertainment in the Russian Embassy was on an elaborate scale, in the grand manner. A Russian ambassador was usually a millionaire.

If there are ghosts of the Czar's horses, there are ghosts also of lovely ladies and handsome gentlemen who accompanied them to the stately parties.

Here, for certain, is a strange contrast. Where once was known all this opulence, a display of wealth and beauty, there is now nothing but the shell of former glory. Inside the mansion, its windows boarded and covered, the gold still glitters, though dimly.

The soft limestone in the walls of the entrance hall is not so bright as it used to be. A smudge of dust conceals its luster. There is, too, a gaping hole in the ceiling of the entrance lobby, probably punched there by a horse hoof—as dancing steeds missed the staircase.

The staircase, a model in precision, with marble risers and steps flanked by gold and wrought iron balustrades, looks lonely from the reception hall.

The staircase leads to dreams of another day, another night. At the head of the staircase, where the Czar's horses are said to come to an abrupt stop every night at midnight, there is the state ballroom—a magnificent apartment that resembles the East Room of the White House.

Walls in Gold and White.

Three chandeliers, somewhat similar to those at the White House, hang like pendants from the ceiling. The walls are done in gold and white—the gold actual gold from the hills—laid on in leafy thickness.

This state room covers the entire front of the embassy on the second floor. At its north end is a huge mirror, bedecked in gold. Below the mirror a mantel of marble—with a fireplace beneath. On the mantel are two handsome lamps, worth their weight in gold.

Gold, gold, gold! Wherever the eye turns it meets the magic luster.

And over that smooth state room floor is a thick covering of dirt—pulverized rubber that floats in from Sixteenth street. Should any of the soft silk slippers tread on the floor now they would come off it looking like the boots of a coal heaver.

On all that second floor—a space wide enough and long enough to hold 5,000 people—there are just three rooms and an alcove.

The second room is the larger ballroom—a room that will appeal mightily to the Soviet Russians should they come to chase the Czar's horses out of the place. This room, a weird conception of the architect's art, is done in only two colors.

The walls are of Soviet red. The ceiling, lighted by an inverted and hidden lighting system, is white—stark white. So that the effect is bizarre. There is not a window in the room. There is no need for a window. It was the hall when big dances were staged. Now it would make an excellent place for a night club, with little tables round the floor, and a stage at one end. A stage and a jazz band playing "The King's Horses."

Dining Room Without Peer.

Opposite this ballroom, and through a corridor, stands the dining room—probably the most handsomely appointed dining room in Washington, not excepting the state dining room at the White House. At least this is the contention of some architects.

When it came to designing a dining room, Mrs. Pullman had her heart set on wood—and wood became the dominant scheme of the dining room in the house she never occupied.

Naturally, the floors are of wood—parquet. The walls are of wood—quartered oak, hand polished, with a patina that might have gathered over a century. In panel effect, each panel is incased in a frame of gold inlay over wreaths. Over each panel is an oil painting, a design of fruit or flowers—still life.

Only two windows open into this room, from the garden. When the hostess or host

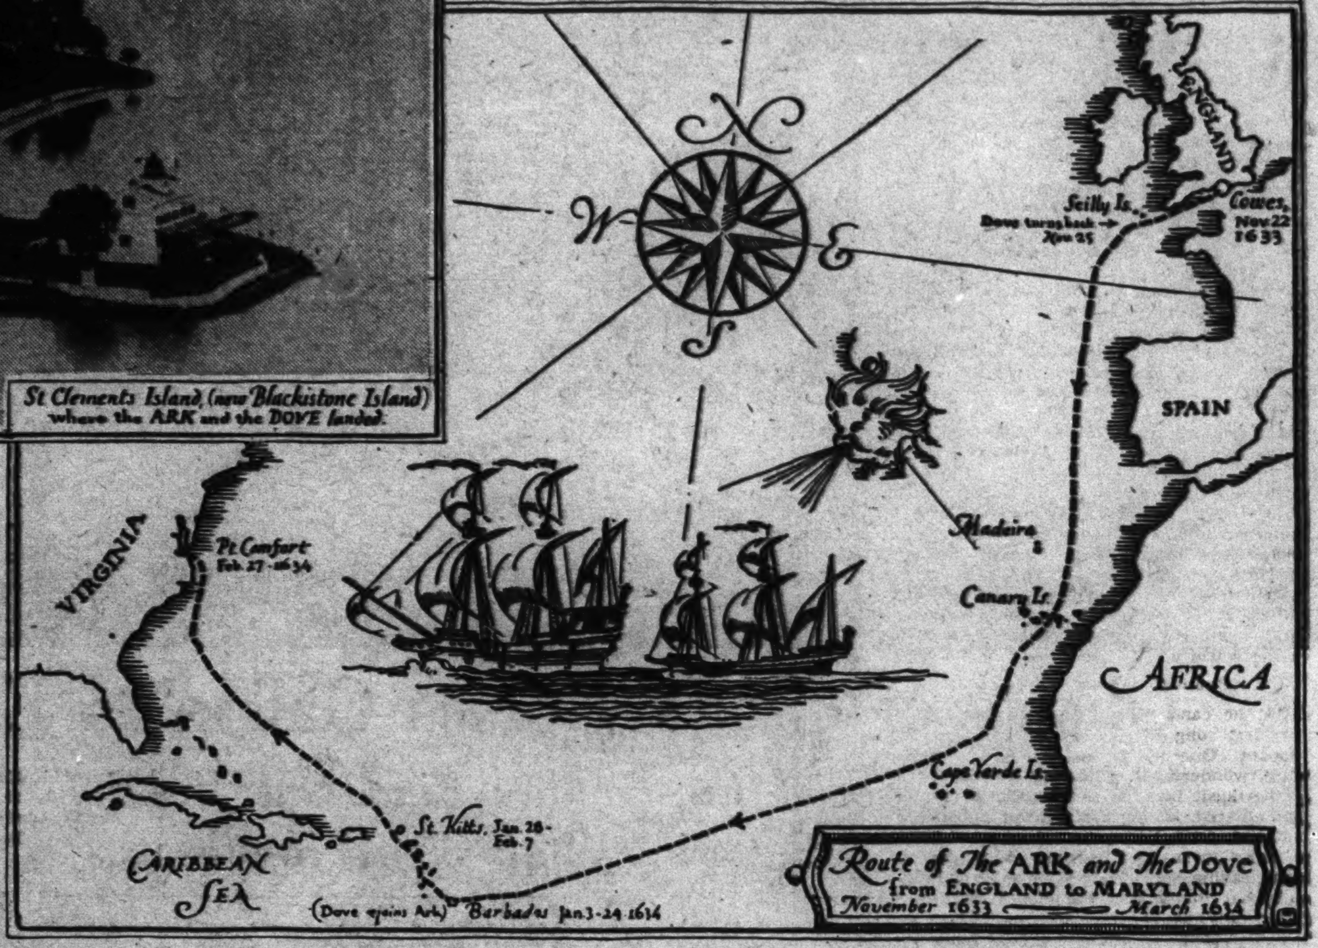
Maryland Colonists' Departure Beset With Obstacles

Foes Questioned Loyalty to King In Seeking to Bar Sailing

St Clements Island, (now Blackistone Island) where the ARK and the DOVE landed.



Route of The ARK and The Dove from ENGLAND to MARYLAND November 1633 — March 1634

Maryland this week begins the official celebration of the 300th anniversary of its founding. This is the fourth of a series of articles on that event.

By William Rufus Scott.

THRILLS are believed by some modern folk to have reached their zenith in this age of the airplane, radio and other marvels of science. But what thrill has this generation experienced that surpassed the wonderment felt by Maryland colonists at the first sight of their new home on the virgin shores of America after a hazardous voyage in tugboat-size vessels? Mingled hopes and fears filled their hearts.

Fear that they might not be permitted to leave England had beset them, dread of pirates and terrific storms at sea, of hostile reception by Virginia's colonists, of savages who peered at them from the banks of the Potomac River. But all yielded to the stronger force of hope—the hope of a new life of adventure which would be crowned with the material success and embroidered with physical and spiritual freedom unknown in England.

Before the climax of their arrival in the New World, however, the sequence of their story must be maintained. In Maryland next Wednesday, in Washington and other cities, and in England itself, the tercentenary of their departure November 22, 1633, will be commemorated with appropriate ceremonies, beginning a series of observances of anniversaries, connected with the founding of the province, which will continue through next June.

The departure from Cowes, in the Isle of Wight, off the southern coast of England, was quiet enough, but stormy times had preceded it. For instance, on October 25, when the two ships, the Ark and the Dove—names suggestive of peace—were ready to sail from Gravesend, on the mainland of England, an officer of the crown appeared with a warrant to detain them until all on board had taken the oath of allegiance.

Religious Issue Rises.

Why such a demand upon English citizens? Back of this sudden interruption of their journey were not only national, but international, political and religious conflicts of that day, so intricate that space is not available here for an analysis of them. The basic explanation is that Maryland was to be a colony owned and controlled by Lord Baltimore, a Catholic, while England was overwhelmingly Protestant. The religious emotions of the age were intense, not only in England, but throughout Europe, with minorities always under suspicion and usually severely restricted.

King Charles, himself a Protestant, having given the charter of Maryland to Lord Baltimore, a Catholic, had no reason for instigating the move for the oath of allegiance. However, powerful officials and leaders of the Protestant majority, highly critical of the king and hearing rumors that the Maryland colonists planned to get a foothold in America and thereafter look more to Rome than to London for guidance, sought through the oath to make it clear beyond doubt that no such result would ensue.

The international phase entered in the determination of officials and leaders that Catholic nations, Spain, for example, should not get more sympathetic consideration from the Maryland colonists than England. However unfounded these suspicions may seem to us now they possessed substance in the heated politico-religious atmosphere of that day.

Without trying to [illegible] the character of King Charles, or the charges brought against him that culminated in his execution at the hands of his fellow Protestants, it is indisputable, as we read the charter today and know the final outcome, that he fully safeguarded the rights of English institutions and his own sovereignty.

Number Sailing Doubtful.

At any rate, about 128 persons took the oath of allegiance. However, the number actually sailing for America on November 22 following must have been around 250, though historians disagree on this point. Either 100 or more joined the ships after the crown officer left, or boarded them at Cowes almost a month later. Among those joining at Cowes were two priests, one of whom, Father Andrew White, left a vivid, first-hand account of the voyage and landing in Maryland.

Lord Baltimore's own estimate of the number sailing was somewhat higher, for he remarked in a letter to a friend that the ships had sailed with "two of my brothers, with very near 20 other gentlemen of very good fashion, and 300 laboring men well provided in all things." This number may have been the original scope of the passenger list rather than the number which finally sailed since it does not appear that the first colonists totaled 320 or more. Lord Baltimore's brothers were Leonard and George Calvert, the former being designated as governor.

Lord Baltimore deemed it wise to remain in England to protect the interests of the colony. For 42 years he remained at his post, never visiting Maryland. He lived to see his friend and benefactor, King Charles, executed. Control of the province was taken out of his hands, but was restored by the Puritan dictator, Oliver Cromwell.

Protestants on Vessels.

That Lord Baltimore smarted under the attacks directed at his colony is shown in the second paragraph of his "Instructions" to his lieutenants when the ships sailed. These "Instructions" are best known for the noteworthy first paragraph enjoining religious toleration upon the colonists. In the second paragraph he directs vigorously that the passengers be quizzed concerning any knowledge they might have of the persons responsible for obstructions put in the way of the expedition, and after landing in Maryland to take more drastic steps to obtain such information which was to be forwarded to him in London.

There were Protestants in the ships, including one or two of the gentlemen mentioned by Lord Baltimore. The colony was open to Protestants.

With the official interruption at Gravesend fresh in their minds, the colonists were immensely relieved when their ships cleared the last outpost of England and headed into the vast waters on a southerly course before striking west to America. What if they met pirates who now and then pounced out of the Mediterranean to conquer merchant ships and kill or enslave their passengers? Or Spanish warships, still resentful of the defeat by the English of the mighty Spanish sea power in the preceding generation, and more currently angered by raids of British buccaneers upon Spanish merchantmen returning from America laden with silver and other precious cargo?

Father White's narrative records these anxieties. He begins, however, with the statement that they "set sail with a gentle wind blowing." The next day, November 23, a gay mood replaced the fearful glances at receding English ports whence efforts might have emanated to detain the voyagers again. The Ark came up with and had a race with a fine ship of 600 tons, or twice its own size, and Father White boasted "our ship would have beaten the other if we had not been obliged to stop on account of the pinnace."

Storm Menaces Vessels.

On November 25 a great storm began which lasted more than a week. The Dove gave a prearranged signal, indicating it would return to port, but because of the intensity of the storm those on the Ark believed the pinnace had sunk. They saw and heard nothing more of the Dove until months later when, to their immense joy, the ship rejoined them in the West Indies, and together they proceeded to Chesapeake Bay.

The bravest on board the Ark, wrote Father White, "were struck with terror" by the storm. The main sail was split by the force of the wind and the ship tossed helplessly about on the high seas. Prayers were made for their safety. They came safely through the storm and for the next three months they had "delightful weather." Nor did they meet pirates or hostile men-of-war off the Spanish or African coasts.

In late December the Ark made its first stop at the Canary Islands, then islands known as the Fortunate Isles. Aside from seasickness no one had been seriously ill up to this time. Then the old Demon Rum took a hand.

In celebration of Christmas, while at the Canary Islands, wine was given out to the ship's company. Some, reported Father White, imbibed too freely, and 12 died, of whom, he stated, two were Catholics. The fact that 10 Protestants died to 2 Catholics can not be taken as the ratio of Protestants to Catholics in the colony, for there were more Catholics than Protestants, but it reiterates the fact that the colony, though organized and directed by Catholics, was not exclusively for them.

Thrilled by Flying Fish.

Leaving the Canary Islands, the Ark sailed due west and arrived at Barbados, in the West Indies, on January 3. It was a pleasant voyage marked by such thrills as seeing flying fish for the first time and other strange sea life. After taking aboard fresh water and provisions, the Dove, having rejoined the Ark, left Barbados on January 24 and arrived February 27 off Point Comfort, Va., "full of apprehension lest the English inhabitants, who were much displeased at our settling, should be plotting something against us."

The letters they had from King Charles, however, dissipated these fears. The Virginians treated them kindly, giving them supplies and the ships sailed up Chesapeake Bay to the mouth of the Potomac River. While the exact spot for their first settlement was not fixed, Lord Baltimore had specified as particularly as he could where they were to land. It was to be far enough up the river to be safe from roving ship of piratical inclinations and reasonably distant from the Virginians.

Father White grew rapturous at his first view of the bay. "You will scarcely find a more beautiful body of water," he exclaimed, but his best superlatives were reserved for the river. The bay, he added, "yielded the palm to the Potomeack River," and to drive home his estimate he exulted that "the Thames seems a mere rivulet in comparison."

On March 5 they were at the mouth of the river and soon sighted Indians in the groves of stately trees. Father White noted that the banks were not low and swampy but high, and there was no underbrush to mar the beauty of the forests. When they anchored off St. Clements Island (the names being given as they went along) he notes that it abounded in cedar, sassafras and

Back Door Nearly Blocked Woodin's Music Partnership

Publisher Fled, but Card Proved Tuneful Key, Unlocking Fortune.

WILLIAM H. WOODIN, who last Wednesday went on an "extended leave of absence" from his duties as Secretary of the Treasury, has written a new piece of music, "The Toy Soldier."

When the United States Navy Band, under the leadership of Lieut. Charles Benter, celebrates its anniversary Wednesday night in the Sail Loft at the Navy Yard, one of the airs featured will be "The Toy Soldier."

In the audience, hearing this composition for the first time in public, Mr. Woodin will be host to a party of music-lovers.

Thus the United States Navy Band has the honor of launching a new Woodin number on its way to fame and glory.

Woodin music has a vogue.

The Navy Band has helped make Woodin music popular, and Charles Benter, leader of the band, has done most of the arranging for the composer.

Back of all this is the story of how Mr. Woodin came to be a popular composer—and the man who helped him hit his stride in Tin Pan Alley.

Sponsor of the Woodin music is Charles Miller, for many years musical arranger for the late Flo Ziegfeld. There is no man in the world who can sense a song quicker.

Publisher Ducks Out Door.

But he came within an inch of missing the first song hit written by William H. Woodin. One day he was in his New York office, wondering what was going to become of the music business, when a slender little man entered. As the story is told, the music publisher figured this was a good moment to make an exit. He went out the back way, leaving word for his secretary to find out what the visitor wanted.

Naturally, the visitor wanted Mr. Miller to hear a song. That is what people usually want when they call on a music publisher. Well, the head of the firm didn't want to hear any songs.

However, Mr. Woodin left his card and said he'd come back. On the card was a Philadelphia address, the home office of one of the biggest corporations in America.

Just why the president of the American Car & Foundry Co. wanted the head of a music house to hear a composition was something that intrigued Mr. Miller. So, at the appointed hour, at the time when Mr. Woodin said he'd be back, he was there waiting for him with open arms. With a few rough spots ironed out, the song would go—so Mr. Miller said after listening to the melody.

Start of Partnership.

"All right," said Mr. Woodin, "if you think it will go, publish it."

"First it will have to be arranged."

"All right," said Mr. Woodin, "arrange it."

There and then began a partnership.

Mr. Miller has arranged more Broadway song hits than the Follies has chorus girls—all the Follies since the Follies began. He not only arranged Mr. Woodin's first song, but he published the song. It made a fair success.

Later, however, Mr. Woodin was to walk into that very same office with a new script—and this script was to sweep the country by storm, as the saying goes.

That song was "Spring Is in My Heart Again," first published in England. You've probably heard it. "Spring Is in My Heart Again" earned plenty of money for the publishing firm. It made money, too, for Mr. Woodin, who is still drawing royalties.

However, there came very near being a slip on that song—and it happened this way:

Mr. Woodin, soon after he got the inspiration for "Spring Is in My Heart Again" went on a trip to Europe, carrying the original manuscript with him.

Phones Across Atlantic.

Over on the other side, Mr. Woodin called Mr. Miller on the long distance phone.

"I'd like to have my new song published in England, while I'm here," the future Secretary of the Treasury remarked.

"That is all right by me, provided you don't get into the hands of some highbinder."

"Who is a good publisher here?"

Miller told him the name of a good publisher, and warned not to sign away the American rights in his contract. It seems that Mr. Woodin suffered a lapse of memory. Anyway, he signed away all rights.

When "Spring Is in My Heart" became an instantaneous hit in England, Mr. Miller wanted to publish it in America. The firm had to pay an English music publishing company for the American rights.

Since then Mr. Woodin has learned many things, and has had many thrills over his music. When he first came to Washington he was rather sensitive about his compositions. He had received more publicity than the average musician gets in a lifetime. Victor Herbert, in his heydey, had never received so much attention. All because Mr. Woodin had been selected to join Mr. Roosevelt's Cabinet.

Briefcase Stirs Curiosity.

"What have you got there?" someone asked as Mr. Woodin, briefcase in hand, went to the Treasury to see Ogden Mills, then about to vacate his office as Secretary.

"What have I got where?" Woodin asked.

"In that briefcase."

"Oh, that. Just some papers."

"I thought it was your guitar," the questioner opined.

Mr. Woodin laughed; but later, in his first press interview, he asked the Washington correspondents to go easy on the music stuff.

"They're beginning to kid me," he said, whimsically.

He told the truth. They had begun to kid him; but those days, too, are over—for the Nation found that in this man there was the makings of a great composer.

Reluctant to go into this phase of his life, Mr. Woodin talks music only with musicians. To him, this gift is sacred—like the divine spark of the poet.

When a real musician gains Mr. Woodin's confidence, however, that is something else again. He will talk for hours on his favorite theme, it is said by those who know him.

Melody runs through the whole nature of the man.

Music and mathematics may seem like worlds apart; but here is a concrete illustration that mathematics and music are twin brothers. Otherwise there would be no explanation for the gift of the gods conferred upon Mr. Woodin. He is apt with figures, as well as with the chromatic scales.

Musicians of fine caliber do not hesitate to say that Mr. Woodin is a good musician.

Mr. Woodin continues to write his music—to compose it, to be strictly technical. And every time he turns out a new masterpiece, Lieut. Charles Benter takes the lead sheet and makes the arrangement for band.

Then, when the arrangement is made, there is usually a concert—like the one coming this week—at which Mr. Woodin is usually present with friends.

It has been a happy triumvirate—Woodin, the composer; Miller, the publisher, and Benter, the bandmaster.

The trio have had some high old fun getting out the Woodin numbers—and no one enjoys the work any more than Mr. Woodin himself.

While some of his music is in the popular vein—like "Spring Is in My Heart Again" —the greater proportion of it ascends to a higher scale.

The Woodin music has been played by such musical organizations as the New York Philharmonic, the Philadelphia Symphony, and the National Symphony, here in Washington.

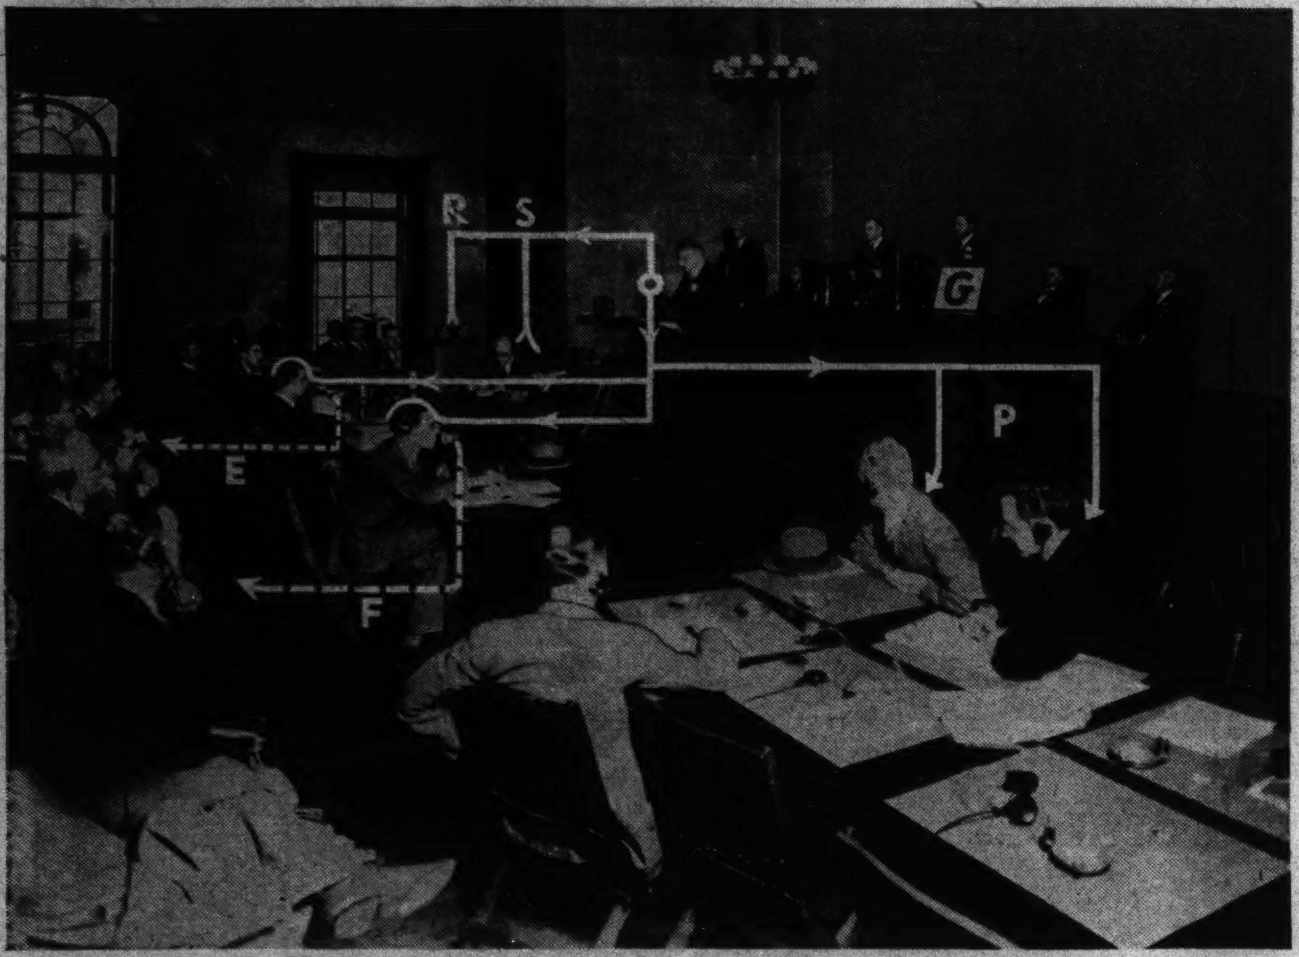
Mr. Woodin's music has even entered the movies. His suite, "Covered Wagon Days" was used for the celebrated picture of that title, long before it ever became known that Woodin himself was a composer of the first heights. It happened then that Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld got hold of the script, arranged it and adapted it to movie purposes and scored a great hit. All this came to light only a year ago when Dr. Riesenfeld was in Washington at the premiere of the Edna Ferber film, "Cimarron."

While the great symphony orchestras of the Nation are given to playing the Woodin suites, the United States Navy Band stands as the musical organization closely associated with the composer.

One, not so long ago, an entire evening in the Sail Loft, at the Navy Yard, was devoted to Woodin music—two full hours of melody, all from the fertile imagination of a high financier whose hobby is music.

Phones Rout Babel at World Parleys

Delegates, Receivers on Ears, Will Listen to Interpreters at Montevideo



This photograph depicts graphically how the language problem is conquered at world conferences. G—a sign announcing the talk is in German. The speaker is standing in front of the presiding official, talking into a microphone. Facing him are translators. The arrow E depicts English translator and delegates listening to him through earphones. F is the French section; P the press, R the recording device, and S the official stenographer.

SCHEDULED to meet at Montevideo, Uruguay, next December, is an economic conference of the Pan American Union. Ministers, officials and delegates of 21 countries from both American continents will express their views concerning many problems. French, Spanish, English and Portuguese will be the official languages.

World history will be made; agreements affecting millions will be drawn; pacts and protocols will be signed by which the destinies of nations may be changed. All statesmen are not linguists, unfortunately, and there must be perfect and universal understanding among those who attend before results can be attained.

Thus enters the problem of interpretation, one which has been vital to all peoples through human history. Necessity fosters invention; therefore, man has evolved a mechanical solution of the problem.

Hitherto at international gatherings interpreters listened to speeches delivered—say in German—and repeated it in other languages immediately after the speaker. Subsequently delegates would counteract the remarks in other tongues.

Tedious Dialogues.

By such methods, a discussion requiring ordinarily an hour between two persons speaking the same language, in a bilingual dialogue takes almost twice as long. And the matter further complicates itself when three or four languages are involved.

This important element of time led interpreters, both in Washington and Geneva, to devise ways and means whereby a saving of time could be effected simultaneously with an increase in the efficiency of the interpretations. One of the early methods consisted in having the interpreter sit by the listening delegate and repeat in a very low voice what the speaker was saying. Then, by the time the remarks of the latter ended, the former could immediately reply.

This system proved satisfactory—and is still used—in cases of conversations between two persons, although the interpreter jumping from one end of the table to the other, aside from detracting from formality, becomes irksome and awkward for statesmen.

When it came to a large gathering, it was necessary to have as many interpreters as delegates—something which approaches the impossible, both because of the ensuing clutter of persons and the scarcity of capable linguists.

It has not yet been definitely decided who was the originator of the idea applying modern inventions to the interpretation of conferences. Interpreters both in Washington and Europe lay claim to the honor. However, when it became necessary to have many persons listening at once to the interpreter, the telephone offered a brilliant suggestion.

Earphones Solve Problem.

All those present were provided with ear phones, connected with a regular telephone, wherein the interpreter translated the speaker's remarks simultaneously with the talk. In the course of the last five years, after many tests and experiments, a New York concern has developed a special apparatus, using the principles of radio broadcasting, now being used extensively on both continents.

The Pan-American Union was the first organization in Washington to adopt the system. It has been used also by the International Road Congress and by the International Chamber of Commerce in their meetings here. Other world-wide groups, such as Rotary International, have made use of it at their regular assemblies. The system was put into use at Geneva. All conferences held there in recent years have been interpreted in this manner.

The system has been perfected with the introduction of a supersensitive microphone into which the interpreter whispers in the lowest whisper. There is no noise interference since the microphone does not register any sound originating more than 3 inches away. The microphone is connected with a control panel installed in an adjoining room, where the interpreter's voice is amplified to the desired volume by means of specially devised radio tubes. From this room it goes to as many pairs of earphones as there are delegates. In this manner, the deliberations go on smoothly, without loss of time.

All Languages Possible.

Any number of languages can be handled, the system working in the following manner: Let us assume the official languages are English, German, French and Spanish. Three bilingual interpreters will do the job. All will be able to translate one central language—French, for instance—and one of the other three.

If a Spanish speaker has the floor, his remarks will be translated simultaneously into French, directly into the earphones of the French-speaking delegates, and into special earphones of the other interpreters who, in turn, will translate into German and English the speech being delivered in Spanish which in turn is reaching them in French. In this manner, within almost a split second, the Spanish speech is reaching the ears of a large group of persons in three other different languages.

At the seat of each delegate is installed a dial with a movable handle which may be turned to the desired language. Suppose a Japanese delegate understands both French and English. It may be that the interpretations coming to his earphone in French are not very clear to him. He merely turns the handle to where it says "English" and—presto! He continues listening to the same speech in English.

The interpreters usually sit immediately under the rostrum, facing the speaker. Presiding officers are provided with earphones. So are visitors and press representatives. At the speakers' platform, and on the chairman's desk are small red bulbs. Whenever the speaker plunges into his subject with unusual ardor, and talks at a rate of speed physically impossible for the interpreter to follow, the latter flashes the light in the bulb—a polite "slow down" request.

Even Recording Machines.

In combination with the interpreting system, a new means of reproducing the deliberations, discussions and speeches has been devised. A sensitive microphone is installed at the speakers' stand and another at the chairman's place. Both are connected with a recording machine similar to a dictaphone. Every word uttered from the chair and from the speakers' stand is electrically recorded on wax cylinders.

This system has distinct advantages:

First, it saves time, since immediately after each cylinder is recorded, the transribers type its contents. Thus, within 10 or 15 minutes after the session has adjourned, a complete typewritten record of the proceedings is available and ready to be printed or used in any manner desired.

Second, it is customary at many conferences to have delegates participate in discussions in strict order of registration with the secretary. However, the rules are often ignored and delegates part in heated arguments. Stenographic reporters often are unable to follow the rapid exchange of words and the interpreter is completely lost. With this recording system, all speakers are required to come to the rostrum, give their names clearly, and proceed with their remarks, talking into the microphone.

As the delegates are warned that anything that is said on the floor will not be reproduced and will be left out of the record, they prefer to refrain from indulging in these heated arguments from the floor.

A third advantage lies in the fact that when the minutes are distributed, many delegates blame stenography for their not always too perfect speeches. In this case, their own recorded voice tells the tale without possible inaccuracy.

All this mechanical proof of man's ingenuity would be useless, however, without able interpreters. Very few people realize the tremendous amount of mental energy required to listen to a speaker in one certain language, and simultaneously translate his remarks into another—especially since, in a majority of cases, he may be, in the first instance, listening to a language not his own.

Jose R. Tercero, chief interpreter and translator of the Pan-American Union, in Washington, is one of the few men capable of this work. He will attend the conference at Montevideo.

Science Has Final Word in Exchange Names

Phonetics and Problems of Dialing Present "Jig-saw" Puzzle.

NAMES for telephone central offices—like names for babies—are subjects of great interest to many persons. In a metropolitan area like Washington and its suburbs, with numerous central offices serving several hundred thousand telephones, it is essential that names be selected that can be pronounced clearly, distinctly, without confusion.

Picking a name for a central office may appear to be a simple question to the public. This is a delusion. The selection is given serious consideration by telephone engineers, not only for the immediate present but for the future growth of the community. A city of several hundred thousand population may grow to a million as decades wing past. Hence the necessity of planning well.

Since more than half the telephones in Washington are of the dial type (52.7 per cent to be exact) it is of great importance in choosing central office names to meet dialing requirements. Since three different letters and one numeral appear in all but one position on the dial, it is apparent that the new central office must be one which first two letters do not fall in a sequence of groups already in use. In other words in dialing the Cleveland central office, the letter C and L are dialed. Now A and B also appear in a group with C on the dial, and J and K appear with L, so, for instance, the word "Akron" would not be suitable because dialing A and K would be the same as dialing C and L.

Problem of Phonetics.

Phonetics must be considered in selecting central office names. Names that are easily pronounced have a direct bearing on telephone service. If a name is chosen in a haphazard manner it may be difficult to transmit distinctly over telephone circuits. The result would be wrong numbers and poor telephone service.

It can readily be seen that compared with naming the prize member of the family, the baby, the designation to be selected for a telephone office is much of an undertaking and something that calls for a great deal of study and research.

Telephone officials in Washington as far as possible have selected names that have National or local significance as central office designations. The names of former Presidents have been utilized for several central offices, Adams, Cleveland and Lincoln. Columbia also is a designation of National significance, while Potomac is named for the river on which Washington stands.

In selecting names for Washington telephone offices research was made in the Library of Congress. A list of local, general and historical names that might be suitable was compiled. In all, several thousand names were considered by engineers in charge.

In eliminating names, consideration was given to designations of existing central offices not only in Washington, but in nearby cities, such as Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, Pittsburgh and Richmond. Names that were the same as those of central offices in these cities, or that even sounded like them, were stricken from the list because their use might cause confusion in handling intercity telephone service.

One-Syllable Names Dodged.

While three of the present central offices in Washington are named for former Presidents, it was found necessary to eliminate practically all of the other Presidents' names because of their use in other places or names that sounded similar.

One naturally would think that short names would be first choice for central office designations, but as a general rule names of one syllable must be avoided. For instance, Lee, over the telephone, sounds like three, and Tate, like eight.

Of outstanding heroes of the Nation such as Dewey, Bainbridge, Porter, Lawrence, Jones, Wayne, Custer and Logan, it was necessary to throw out their names for reasons of conflict with offices in other sections. Crockett and Farragut were recommended for future consideration.

The engineers, after going through the list and throwing out those that were known to be unsuitable for the reasons previously mentioned, selected about 200 names as possibilities and worthy of further consideration.

This number was finally reduced to 25 as being the most satisfactory of the total number submitted. These names were then subjected to severe tests in central office training schools and over standard telephone circuits. Each name was tested more than 5,000 times so that those not clearly and distinctly recognizable could be eliminated.

These tests were made by engineers, instructors, experienced operators and students. Every effort was made to detect any defect in the sound or pronunciation of a name.

Since the names of telephone offices in Washington and its suburbs are called on an average of about 1,000,000 names a day, it can very readily be seen that every con-

Steeplejacks' Brains and Brawn Banded to Clean Giant Chimneys

SOME few years ago, about 1925, the last of the dyed-in-the-soot chimney sweeps disappeared from Washington. He will be remembered for his call, "I clean chimneys," his extreme height and the tall, pointed tin stovepipe hat that perched on his head. His genuinely sooty appearance was accentuated by a long, black silk coat as he paced along, brush and bucket slung over one shoulder. Daily he canvassed the streets with his high, dolorous cry.

Mrs. V. C. Moore, a relative of the Washington Ingle family, gives a vivid picture of the sweep about 1825, in her "Reminiscences of Washington." She says:

"Speaking of fires suggests another institution of the early days, that of the chimney sweep, a very important, indeed esteemed, individual, since the almost universal use of wood as fuel necessitated the removal of soot from the chimneys. Sometimes this was done by 'burning out,' but usually the aid of a chimney sweep was invoked.

"This functionary, as remembered by the writer, was generally short and very broad, as though in apology for doing his work by proxy. He always appeared followed by a long, narrow boy, apparently built for the purpose, black when he went up and blacker when he came down, who carried on his arm a sooty blanket, and in his hand the insignia of his office, known to the profession as the 'scraper.'

"Mute the little fellow stood while his chief removed from the big open fireplace the oven in which the bread was baked, pushed back the crane where swung the pots and kettles, then, feeling the chimney to see if sufficiently cool, fastened across the front, by means of two forks, the aforesaid blanket, behind which disappeared the pajama-clad midget who was to do the work. Scraper in hand, the boy began his climb. After a moment or two of fluttering, suggestive of the chimney swallow, came a silence proportionate to the height of the chimney, when with a 'Sweep, ho!' he emerged from the top and poured forth his reassuring song, telling his master of his faithfulness to his trust and the public generally of the woes of the poor little sweep, in rhyme as sublime as are the New Year effusions of our omnipresent 'carriers' and 'messenger boys.'

"Resting awhile in the upper air, he slowly began the descent, and as the scrape, scrape was heard, the showers of soot fell behind the blanket, until, at last, the little ebony figure appeared, with cone-shaped cap drawn over his eyes, and held out a grimy hand for the big, round penny which awaited him below as his personal perquisite."

The Charles Lamb-Charles Dickens sweep is gone, but for over a hundred years his successors held a dwindling place in Washington commerce. The District, beginning in 1822, yearly appointed three superintendents of chimney sweeping. They were hired to clean each chimney on their lists once a month after giving two days' notice that they were on the way. They were paid 10 cents per story per flue for all public buildings and dwellings. The superintendents kept records of their work, including names of householders and building owners who refused to permit them to sweep.

Natural enemies, the Kid, Mongoose vs. Hooded Cobra, put on a three-minute fight to the death. Wealth Beyond Croesus' Wildest Dreams Becko

Modern Salvagers May Retrieve Hoards That Lured Adventurers to Doom

By Harry E. Rieseberg.

ROMANCES for centuries have fed the minds of dreamers with visions of crusted bars of gold and heaps of yellow coin lying in their rotting chests in the rusting holds of wrecked ships long gone down to the watery graves of Davy Jones' locker. It is an attractive dream, this shadowy, submarine vision of millions in bullion lying no farther, perhaps, below the surface of the ocean than a bass fisher casts his lure.

Hidden gold! Dripping, slimy gold ingots and silver plate, and jewels galore! Blood-stained romances and gorgeously woven legends, stiffened with the rich brocades of old Castile.

They are still there, rusty tombstones of the sea, treasure-troves, strange stories of wrecked galleons that take the adventurer back to the days of Genghi's Khan and the Golden Horde.

Fifty fathoms—300 feet—below the surface lies the deepest of these known prizes. When most of these vessels sank the world had no such diving equipment as that which, during the last few years, has come into existence. But the bottom of the ocean is still pretty much unexplored territory, and the treasure-troves of the big round globe are again offering a powerful lure to the adventurous!

Romance Again Revived.

The glory of the romance of treasure hunting has again revived! Millions of dollars in gold! That's a low estimate of the immense wealth yet lying in the hulls of ships rotting beneath the seven seas.

The huge treasure of the Merida, New York & Cuba Mail liner, with $1,000,000 in gold, including the crown jewels of Emperor Maximilian—unhappy monarch of Mexico—lies 70 miles off the Virginia Capes, encrusted with barnacles, strangely quiet, schedules and time tables no longer to meet; chronometers, dividends and whirring propellers long forgotten.

Operations were under way to salvage these riches from their watery tomb, the treasure was within reach, and that strange madness arose that grips men when gold in untold amounts is at stake—then these hardy adventurers were tied up by court injunctions. Some day, somebody will gather this wealth from the Merida.

Let us roll back the curtain of years to the Revolutionary War days. In the East River of New York City, near Hell Gate, lies the rotting timbers of the British frigate Lexington, its hold still retaining intact the silver and gold bars and Mexican coin looted from Vera Cruz in the eighteenth century. Nearby lies the Hussar, another British man-of-war, sunk in 1780 with a fortune of $2,000.000 to $4,000,000 in gold, now being salvaged by R. T. Powell, New York City.

Privateer Sinks Like Lead.

Farther down the coast are the treasure-waters of Cape Henlopen, where, off the Delaware Capes, in 15 fathoms of water, lies the wreck of the British privateer De Braak, which on May 25, 1798, filled and went down to the bottom of the sea like a hulk of lead, taking with her the captain and 38 officers and men—one of the most sudden of the tragedies that darkened so many days in the romantic Age of Sail.

The vessel was assigned to service in the Caribbean waters, where Spanish prizes might make rich pickings for the British. Setting out in pursuit of the Spanish galleon St. Francis Xavier, laden with gold and silver bars, she captured her, transferring the loot to her hold. While en route to Halifax to sell the prize-ship she met her fatal anchorage a mile off Old Kiln Roads. Many unavailing attempts have been made to salvage the treasure, in mud not more than 15 fathoms below the surface.

Among the tales of lost treasure in sunken ships none are more diverting than that of the American liner, Central America, of 2,141 tons, returning from the California gold fields with gold dust and nuggets amounting to $2,000,000, which lies today under many tons of sand off Cape Hatteras. She was lost September 12, 1857, when she encountered a terrific hurricane. Lives of 400 persons were snuffed out.

Off the end of Douglas Island, near Juneau, Alaska, lies the hulk of one of the most persistently sought treasure ships, that of the ill-fated British steamer Islander, lost in the fall of 1901 during the days of the Alaskan gold rush. The vessel was owned by the Canadian Pacific Navigation Co., out of Victoria, B. C. Authentic reports and documents in the hands of the writer list her cargo as $3,000,000 in gold dust and nuggets, which she was bringing to the States. Each year some salvage group makes an effort to retrieve this fortune, always unsuccessfully.

Tragedy of Side-Wheeler.

The side-wheeler Brother Jonathan sailed out of San Francisco Harbor July 28, 1865, bound for Portland and Victoria, with a crew of 54 and 109 passengers. Two days later the leaky steamer encountered a terrific sea. While putting back to land she struck a rock 10 miles off Crescent City, Calif., foundering within the hour. Tradition of West Coast seafaring folk estimate her treasure cargo at $500,000, although conservative estimates and shipping reports put its value at $350,000.

Several attempts have been made to bring this gold to the surface with the crude methods of the past, but to date it still remains in the clutches of California's calm coastal waters.

Like a picture of the legend of the Sargasso Sea come true would be the scene of lost ships now lying under the waters of the Great Lakes—ships heaped one up on the other mounds of spars and cargoes—dead men, dead ships. Ghosts of drowned seamen haunt the shattered decks of sunken schooners, sloops and steamers, guarding their rich cargoes of hidden gold and other riches.

Steamer Vanishes Mysteriously.

Between Dunkirk and Erie lies a treasure ship which will bring a fortune to her lucky discoverer. One night the Huron Transportation Co.'s steamer Dean Richmond, of 1,257 gross tons, with a cargo of $50,000 in pig zinc, mysteriously disappeared between the two ports. All hands were lost.

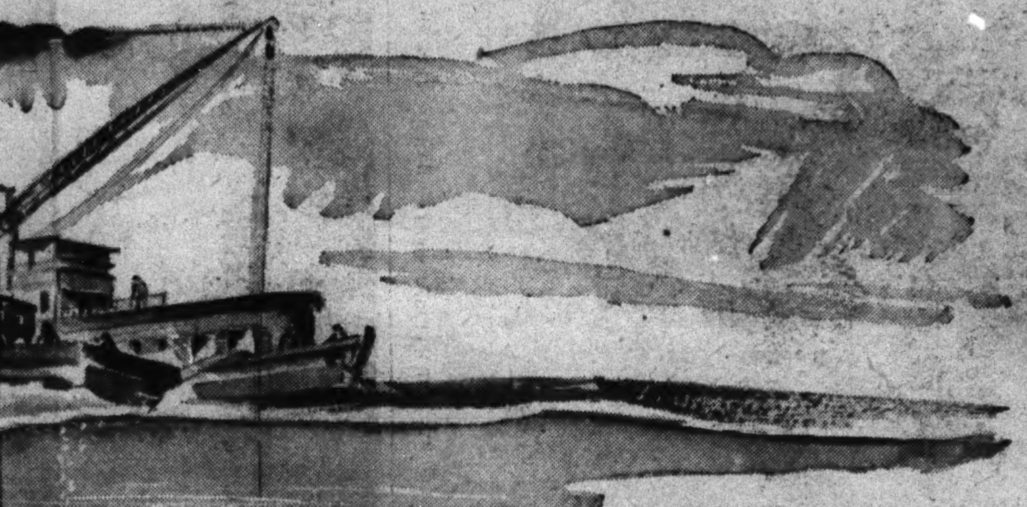
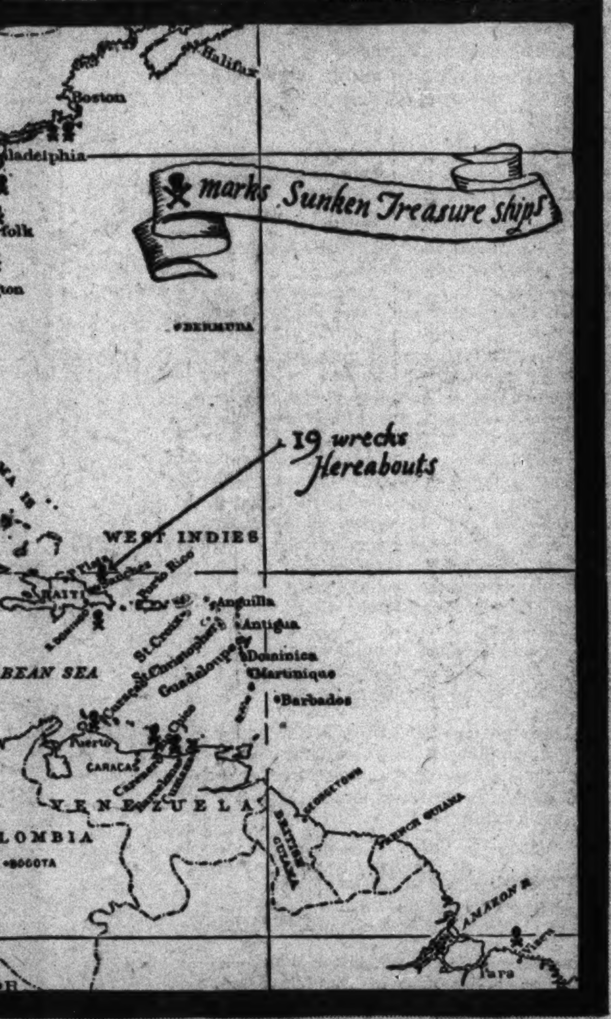
ckons From Hulks of Foundered Treasure Ships





Their bodies were washed ashore a few days later.

The City of Detroit, with a treasure of copper bars valued at $60,000, still lies somewhere in the same locality, while in the deep waters near Walnut Creek lies the Young Sion with a valuable cargo of railroad iron, and off Point Pelee is the Kent, with a vast sum of money in her hulk and the skeletons of eight human beings. The 1,711-ton steamer Clarion, of the Erie and Western Transportation Co., of Wyandotte, Mich., which burned to the water's edge in December, 1909, with a cargo of locomotives on board, about 7 miles southeast of South East Shoals, still remains in the lake's bottom.

Romantic Coast of Haiti.

Lake Huron, frequently referred to as the "Lake of Sunken Treasure," contains the battered hulls of the steamers Fay, R. G. Coburn, Lexington and Griffin, each loaded with great cargoes of wealth in steel, copper, whisky and wine. Perhaps the most romantic of all disappearances on the lakes was the Griffin. In January, 1679, she sailed across the lakes to gather a cargo. After stowing her hold with merchandise and thousands of dollars' worth of pelts and furs from the Michigan trapping country, together with $12,000 in gold, she started on her return passage. She was never heard of again. Historians are generally of the opinion that the little ship sunk during a storm on Lake Huron.

Caskets of precious jewels, chests of gold ingots, bags of pieces-of-eight, doubloons, ducats and pearls awaiting the treasure-seeker, lured by grimy, tattered charts and records of authentic origin, in the tropical waters off the coast of Haiti. In those old haunts of pirates, thieves, wreckers and villians still lie many rich treasure-ships. There are danger to be faced in these waters, sudden hurricanes, yellow fever, barracudas, giant squid, dreaded tiger sharks and undersea rocky pinnacles that rip bottoms out of ships.

Somewhere off the end of Sarvona, still lies the famed galleon of Gov. Bobadilla, with its golden cargo. In 1500, Bobadilla, then governor of Hispaniola by appointment of King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella, was recalled to Spain to give place to a new governor, Ovando by name. He sailed in the largest galleon of the fleet, on board of which was placed a considerable amount of gold, the revenue collected for the Spanish crown during his administration.

A tropical hurricane met his ship within a few hours after leaving port, and she foundered in deep water with all on board. The secret of her exact position is buried with her somewhere beneath shelves of rock and banks of sand that lie off the southeast coast of Santo Domingo in shark-infested waters.

Not far from this vessel lies an entire fleet of galleons, bound from the rich Potosi mines of Peru, Spain's wealthiest possession at the time, for the homeland in 1643, with a cargo of gold bullion. Like many vessels of that day, they were smashed into splinters on the Silver Shoals near Puerta Plata, Haiti, during a hurricane. This treasure, lying in the old cruising grounds of the buccaneers, still awaits the treasure-hunter and his modern equipment.

Dutch Battle for Loot.

A Spanish galleon floatilla, with a goodly prize in loot, was captured in Matanzas Bay, Cuba, in September, 1628, by Admiral Pietr Heyn, commander of the Dutch Atlantic fleet. Doubloons and pieces-of-eight for those who dream of treasure! Such was the cargo of this flotilla—11,600,000 florens and church plate of immense value. Tradition relates that all was taken by the Dutch commander, but examination of authentic historical records reveals that the Spaniards, during the chase at night, dropped much of the most valuable cargo overboard into Matanzas Bay.

In the Carribbean, near Curacao, lies many a sunken treasure ship with timbers long years ago rotted and strewn about on the coral-beds of the Schattegat lagoon—treasure to this day buried in the sands of the green depths beneath long coils of seaweed, caressed by every tide in the strong room of the ocean's deep.

Coins still bearing the crowned lion of Holland and the monograms of Spanish, English and French royalty, await recovery by some salvor bold enough to go down there in the sweep and surge of treacherous waters amid the insidious inhabitants of the tropical depths.

Thirteen fathoms below the surface of these waters rests the San Pedro de Alcantara, buried deep in the sands of Margarita Channel between the islands of Cubaque and Coche, in Cumana Bay. This frigate, laden with $4,000,000 in church ornaments, jewels and gold and silver plate, was blown up in 1812 during the Venezuelan War of Liberation. Numerous unsuccessful attempts have been made to procure these immense riches. This wreck should be a real prize for modern salvage operators.

Gloom Cast Over England.

A disaster that cast gloom over all England was the tragedy of the British frigate Thetis. Salvors in 1831 claimed all but one-sixteenth of its lost treasure. On the morning of December 4, 1830, the 46-gun frigate, with a complement of 300 men sailed out of Rio de Janeiro, homeward bound, laden with $810,000 in gold and silver bars. During the evening of the second night at sea, the ship was running at 10½ knots, with studding sails set, and plenty of offing, and the lookout stationed in the cathead had not more than bellowed "breakers under the bow" when his comrade echoed with "rocks above the masthead." An instant later, the soaring bowsprit of the frigate splintered with a tremendous crash against the gigantic cliffs of Cape Frio. All the boats were smashed by falling spars. Only a few aboard survived.

Today the wreck lies in 30 fathoms of water in a bay bounded by gigantic cliffs. The heavy swell has rolled enormous blocks of granite on the ship until the combined forces of rock and water have comprssed sand, wood and iron together. Although there remains less than $100,000 of its original treasure, it should still be a prize worthy of an attempt to salvage.

The magic carpet of the romance of sunken ship's treasure now transports the Unique Personal Conceptions of Art Depicted in Phillips Gallery Exhibits

UNIQUE personal conceptions of art are contained in the early water colors of Charles Burchfield and in the paintings of Louis Elshemus, which form the current exhibition devoted to "Freshness of Vision in Painting" at the Phillips Memorial Gallery.

No better medium to demonstrate freshness of vision in art could have been selected than Burchfield's works. It would be hard to classify them, of course, as they are impressionalistic and realistic at one and the same time. Most of these pictures are memories of the way the objects he paints pleased and terrified him in childhood. The observer will realize that this artist has attained his goal with startling success in many of these works, even to the extent of conveying a sense of sound.

The highly imaginative, weird, delicate character of these paintings sets him apart from other artists as definitely as Poe's poems set him apart from other poets. In fact, many visitors at the exhibition liken his art to the poetry of Poe.

Fantastic Touch in Bells.

"Church Bells Ringing in the Rain" might have been selected to illustrate Poe's "Bells." Through the blinding shower one can see the bell personified as a child might have seen and enlarged it in his imagination. There is motion and certainly an element as near sound as ever will be caught by the artist's brush.

The magnified clamor and insistence of the school bells ringing for the tardy youngster is seen in another picture. We can also envision the wide-eyed boy awake, listening to the howling wind and the fearful potentialities it might bear in the picture of the wind at night. The wind lashes against the curtained windows behind which glows a dim lamp.

Pansies growing at the mouth of a deserted mine like little rabbits on watch reveal an artist as successful in painting silence as he is in sound.

A Few Conventional Pictures.

These optical sensations of Burchfield, based on personal experiences, reach their zenith, perhaps, in the picture of a house by the side of the road in a sleepy Ohio town, with katydids chirping away their short, sunny hours of life. Even the tops of the swaying trees seem to whisper in the sunlight.

There are a few rather conventional pictures in Burchfield's collections. Among these few paintings is the portrait of his mother. She sits in the doorway of a typical American home with a hodge-podge of comfort in the room beyond. "The Corner in Aunt Em's House" shows Aunt Em, herself, in an old-fashioned rocker which she more than fills. A high grandfather's clock and pictures are on the wall.

The works of Louis Elshemus point a lesson to artists who become discouraged through years of lack of recognition. This artist painted unrecognized many years and only won his laurels in his old age. That he has freshness of vision is seen in his freedom, originality and lack of adherence to any stereotyped school. He is now more than 70.

Noted Artists' Works Shown by Art League

WASHINGTON'S art colony is taking proper pride in the exhibits of every phase of art, water colors, prints, oils, pastels and etchings by local artists at the fifth quarterly exhibition, now in progress at the new headquarters of the Art League of Washington, 1503 Twenty-first street northwest.

From the work of its broad and inclusive membership the league has selected more than 150 paintings. The avoidance of favoritism and clique influence is noted in the league's policy of exempting one painting of each artist from jury selection. The league show is set far apart from the usual no-jury show.

Among the artists exhibiting are many who have won renown, not only in Washington but in other cities, and who can ascribe some of their success at least to encouragement given by this unique art institution. Among them are Elizabeth Langenbeck, Angela Hurd, John Dernand, Hazel Cameron, Dorothy Barnes and Jawne Allen. In the landscape field Mary Lafollette Sucher, Julia Eckel, Ruth Osgood, Lars Hoffrup, Alice Acheson, Marie Roelker, A. M. Tschappat, Garnet Jex, A. H. O. Rolle, Robert Motely, Clara Kimberly, Edith Hoyt, Benson B. Moore, Clara Saunders, Katherine Beaman, Beulah Weaver, Eben Comins, Alice L. E. Ferguson and M. M. Siebenthal.

An excellent piece of portraiture is seen in the portrait of Carl Mohlin by Sewell Johnson. It is an unaffected, dignified characterization of the young man, outstanding because of its simplicity in tone and color.

Daring Voluptuousness.

There is a daring voluptuousness in the painting of "Woman and Cat" by Conrad Lubnau, a Detroit artist.

Strikingly decorative is the portrait of a girl by Azadie Herrman, showing the subject seated, dressed in a richly embroidered kimono which harmonizes with the high lights in her bright, wavy hair.

An example of a marine painting, warmly and plastically done, is Josephine Lee's "Narragansett Bay," a convincing reproduction of an active sea beyond rugged rocks.

Gladys Nelson Smith's knack of inculcating a sympathetic note into her work has been more than successful in her really charming study of a little girl.

"Labor," a large mural by Eben Comins, which occupies a prominent place in the entrance hall, calls forth interesting speculations.

The prints collection is small, but the selections are very choice, including those by Inez Demonent, John Taylor Arms, Mary Ball, Minnie Briggs and Louise Washburn.

Artistic aftermaths of vacations are seen in nature study effects contributed by Dorothea McDowell, Edmund Sayer, Antoinette Fulton and Wood Hagen.

School Begins Courses.

The League's School of Fine Arts has already begun its winter schedule, featuring many unique courses and lecture series. It has been fortunate in obtaining the services of Elizabeth A. Barnes, one of the country's most prominent teachers of progressive art, to conduct its children's classes.

Minnie Briggs, outstanding woman etcher in America, will lead the course of study in etching, and E. G. Schierer, master bookbinder and craftsman, will teach book-binding and fine crafts. Sewell Johnson will again conduct her highly successful classes in portraiture, and Antoinette Fulton will create new and interesting problems in batik. A series of lectures on the history of ancient and modern art will be given by Elizabeth Ray Lewis, director of art in the public libraries.

The science of color in application to the artist's crafts will be studied in a course of lectures and discussions given by Dr. I. H. Godlove.

For those persons interested in the study of art, but who are unable to attend classes during the day, the league has formed an unusual group, the Business and Professional Men's Art Club.

Corcoran Will Exhibit Waterbury's Paintings

A notable water-color exhibition will open at the Corcoran Gallery of Art November 28, when the works of Charles H. Waterbury will be shown.

Mr. Waterbury is an American painter who has won world-wide renown because of the delicate transparency, originality and finest of technique of his water colors. He has also attained distinction as an etcher. This American has an enviable collection of medals and honors from exhibitions and institutions in this country and Europe.

One of the most admired paintings in the Corcoran Gallery of Art's permanent collection is "Mount Monadnock," a New Hampshire mountain scene.

Because of the unusual interest in the late Gari Melchers, the exhibition of his works will continue until the end of the month at the gallery. The Mountain Crafts Exhibition will be continutd until November 26.

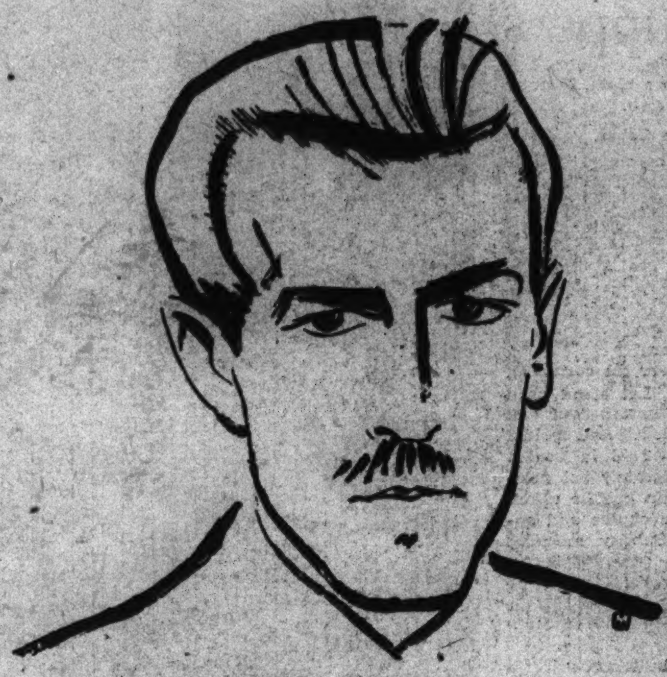
Portraits of Noted Folk On Exhibit at Arts Club

Portraits of interesting people here and overseas add interest to the November exhibition at the Arts Club by Hattie E. Burdette, Washington, and Clara E. Sipprell, one of the leading photo-pictorialists of America.

Miss Burdette has painted portraits of John Langdon in the Capitol, Charles Bonaparte in the Navy Building, and has works in many well-known Virginia institutions.

One of the outstanding portraits in her exhibition is that of Frederich von Dachenhausen, well-known Washington artist.

News and Reviews From Great World of Books



ERNEST K. LINDLEY.

Publishing, House Gossip and Talk of Authors.

YEARS mean nothing to the makers of the Oxford English Dictionary. In 1897 they had been working 40 years on the project and at that time decided to dedicate it to Queen Victoria, inserting a special title-page in the part issued that year. Not until 1928 was the monumental labor completed. The first copies were presented to King George and to President Coolidge, as the highest representatives of the two great English-speaking nations. Now the Oxford University Press has printed a less expensive edition, putting all the original matter in 12 volumes of more convenient size.

This dictionary is distinguished from all others in the language by the exhaustive way in which each word is traced from its first appearance, with every shade of meaning duly recorded and quoted from recognized authors, down to the present time. For example, the verb "set" fills 18 pages and extends to 154 main divisions.

Long-distance announcement marks the coming of a work on the long-distance gun. In 1935 Doubleday Doran will publish Col. Henry W. Miller's study of the evolution of weapons of warfare, entitled "The Paris Gun." During the war Col. Miller was an artillery commander. After the Armistice he gained access to the secret archives of the German general staff, from which came much information used in this book. He is at present on the faculty of the University of Michigan and a technical consultant for the Army.

Light on the "Revolution."

A study, "THE ROOSEVELT REVOLUTION," by Ernest K. Lindley. (Viking, $2.50.)

Here is by all odds the clearest, most compact and most accurate history of the New Deal. It is primarily factual, the work of an outstandingly able newspaper correspondent, who has been assigned to cover Mr. Roosevelt ever since he went to Albany as governor. It is as vivid, as swift moving in narrative as the stirring events it chronicles.

To a Washington correspondent who has lived through the events, this book is not merely a gold mine of fact, a reference of incalculable value, but it is such engrossing reading that I found it almost impossible to put down despite familiarity with the ground it traverses. For it gives new meaning, coherent perspective to the reader and the student of national affairs. Avoiding the pitfall of trying to prove a thesis out of eulogy, it forms a remarkably dispassionate, remarkably complete record. The book is the best work of Mr. Lindley, the reporter, rather than of Mr. Lindley, the Roosevelt admirer. It is a worthy companion book, incidentally, to Mr. Lindley's "Franklin D. Roosevelt, a Career in Progressive Democracy," which I think the best biography of the President yet written.

Prof. Moley, in a review of the book in hand, is fulsome in praise, and permits himself a personal word to say that Mr. Lindley's account of the London Economic Conference serves to dissipate the "mythology" which had grown up about the conference—to Mr. Moley's disparagement. As one who was in a position to know exactly what took place at London, I feel that I may be permitted to remark that Mr. Lindley's account is the most complete and truthful one I have seen. It presents Prof. Moley in the correct light and should help to dispel much unjust criticism of the former head of the President's "brain trust."

Mr. Lindley has left out no important facts of the "Revolution." He uses the word, he explains, because "no other word seems strong enough to describe a change so swift and so fundamental." The chief virtue in this history of the New Deal to date is that it sticks to facts, as Mr. Lindley has gleaned them in his daily newspaper work He has made out a good case for the President without sacrificing the facts, without distorting them, and with a minimum of his own favorable comment or interpretation.

Poems of Nature.

"PASTURES AND OTHER POEMS," by Lizette Woodworth Reese. (Farrar & Rinehart, $1.50.)

These poems, first of all, are of nature. But love, death and a sardonic humor—sometimes malicious, sometimes exquisitely cynical in such a dear lady—are touched by Miss Reese. Her word patterns are pointed, short and sometimes epigrammatic, but never lacking in dignity or her peculiar tenderness.

Those who know the musky scent and frosty shapes of bayberry will feel the wistfulness, for instance, of such lines as these, entitled "Bayberry:"

"Here is the sea held in a silver chest,
And mixed with dreams, and more.
Unlock; and the seven waters of the world
Crash at your door."

And the lovely little poem, labeled "Cynical Advice," which starts out blandly: "Say little if at all."

Miss Reese has a dozen books of poetry behind her. In these later years of her life, her work has only new qualities of sensibility and perception, and her greater gravity is only tempered with greater humor.

MARY DURAND.

Newspaperman's Hero.

A biography, "RICHARD HARDING DAVIS: HIS DAY," by Fairfax Downey. (Scribners, $3.)

Richard Harding Davis, whose audacity was tempered by an innate chivalry, whose flair for the picturesque was backed by that requisite for genius, the capacity for hard work, won for himself a place in the world of journalism and belles lettres to which every newspaperman, even in this cynical day and age, secretly aspires.

Mr. Downey, with an understanding of his hero's background, hence of his motives, and a nice feeling for the difficulties which beset a born dilettante who couldn't help dramatizing himself and who would bring out his guitar on the slightest pretext, has limned Davis' career sympathetically. The book is monotonously illustrated with photographs and reproductions of sketches by Charles Dana Gibson, for whom "R. H. D." posed as the original "Gibson Man."

FRANK GETTY.

The Wanderer Comes Home.

An autobiography, "HOMECOMING," by Floyd Dell. (Farrar & Rinehart, $3.)

When Mr. Dell wrote his autobiographical novel, "Moon-Calf," he was startled to discover that the life of the boy he described, which he had thought rather unique in the world, was paralleled and indeed duplicated by any number of persons from parsons to jailbirds. Even the incidents which befell the young, sensitive, artistic dreaming Dell had happened to them. They sent photographs. With the sorely-gained maturity of which he is patently proud in his new book, he discovers that all human beings go through much the same emotional pilgrimage.

It is a pilgrimage, one sees clearly, in knowing one's mind. For just that is what troubled the youthful Floyd Dell, son of a butcher in Pike County, Ill. Just that assailed him when he found out very early that the good things of the world were behind a glass wall, through which he might peer, but through which he could not, for a very long while, employ the sense of touch. And after he had engaged in the routine of jobs open to a poor boy in a small town, after he had gone to Chicago and assisted Francis Hackett on the Friday Literary Supplement of the Evening Post, even after he had married and written much and become acquainted with an impressive number of persons who were on the rungs of the American literary ladder, he still did not known his own mind. For between the extremes of freedom (it is curious to note that Mr. Dell's general reputation as an exponent of liberated love is one which astonishes him) and of permanence in work and the affections, he wandered with tentative opinions and facile pen.

In "Homecoming," Mr. Dell tells the whole story of his life, his intellectual growth, his friendships, his amours, his work. Because he was most definitely on the crest of the main wave of his time, psychologically and as an author, he speaks for a whole generation. His life was admittedly unconventional, yet any one, conventional or not, will find in his words the sudden recollection of early years. Truth is there for all. He writes with candor, balanced by a realization that he has no right to disclose the secrets of others. He stops short at times with a Victorianism one would not have expected.

At the end, in a second marriage, fatherhood, and the awareness of his own power in novel-writing, he claims to have achieved the stability he had sought all his life. But he says, "From my own point of view, the remarkable thing about Floyd Dell is that he actually could do, and finally did do, most of the things that other people do." With his latest breath, then, all his dear differentness is as implicity maintained as ever. Vaunting stability, he refuses to see himself as his own words exhibit him. He has come home, he says, but he is still Floyd Dell.

The How and Why of Insects.

A Study, "INSECT BEHAVIOR," by Evelyn Cheesman. (Robert Ballou. $1.50.)

In this little book the author has endeavored with considerable success to explain the behavior of insects.

The development of actions from simple tropisms and reflexes is traced through instincts so complicated that many observers have concluded that insects really do think. It is certain that the more highly developed insects, with their complicated nervous systems, seem much more plastic in their behavior than simpler forms, though nothing has ever been observed which would prove absolute reason in insects.

Miss Cheesman, who has for many years been a student of insects and has traveled widely, includes many interesting observations of her own as well as those made by other writers. She describes a vicious battle on a South Sea Island between two species of ants over a bit of sardine; the Tahiti caterpillar which makes its ant-proof home in fungus; the wasp that actually uses a tool in the form of a stone to smooth down the earth with which she has filled the burrow holding her young.

It is a readable book, written for the layman, and it explains in a plain, scientific way how and why insects do many remarkable things This reviewer has often been asked, "Which is the more intelligent, man or the ant?" He has sometimes replied, "It depends on the man—and the ant." But this book answers the question in a less jocular and more scientific manner.

Mrs. Ickes on the Southwest.

A guide and study. "MESA LAND," by Anna Wilmarth Ickes. (Houghton Mifflin. $3.)

Many books on the Indian culture of the Southwest have been written, but never before by the wife of a Secretary of the Interior. Whether it be coincidence or deliberate intent that brings this study to the public early in a new Federal administration, it is certain that the author's interest in her subject long antedates the appointment of Harold L. Ickes to his post of authority over our "citizen wards." Only one who has been in close contact with the life of the Pueblo dwellers and the roaming Navajos could describe it with the faithfulness and affection which Mrs. Ickes reveals.

She has felt deeply the brooding mystery of that arid land where men still invoke the forces of nature with symbolic song and ritual dance. She has experienced that spell of fearful beauty cast by the shifting colors of its light and the silence of its spaces. She knows the spiritual peace that comes to one under its arching sky by day and by night.

Some of this she communicates in her pages because she would have others share it. Only on occasional pages, however, for she has written a combination of historical synopsis, guide book and personal record. The dealings of white men with the Indians are summarized from the Conquistadores to the Civil War. There are chapters of archeological information, and others filled with details about the various Pueblos as they exist today.

To those who intend to visit Mesa Land, Mrs. Ickes gives more practical advice. To those who seek to know the Indian, she offers a sympathetic interpretation. Twenty-eight photographs and a good bibliography enhance the book's reference value.

RAY C. BROWN.

New Books for Children.

Story for boys and girls, "SPUNKY," by Berta and Elmer Hader. (Macmillan, $2.)

The story of this Shetland pony is thrilling as well as amusing. It is well suited for children between 7 and 11. Adventure runs through each episode of the life of Spunky.

This little white pony belonged to a little girl and boy, named Hansel and Gretel. But he was sold and they thought they would never see him again. After many adventures, in which he played in the circus, he was stolen and his hair was painted brown. He was sold to a peddler who did not know he was white.

While in the service of the peddler he was staying on an island when a great storm arose and made the river cover the island. But fortunately Spunky was rescued.

The peddler was surprised when he found the pony was white, but the color did not matter to him. But Hansel and Gretel, who had missed him, recognized him when they saw him on the street, and so they succeeded in buying him back again.

After reading this book you will want to read the many other books written by the same author, such as "Hansel and Gretel," "The Picture Books of Travel" and "The Wonderful Locomotive."

Nice Girls Don't Swear.

The subtle and saucy phrasings of "No Nice Girl Swears" have gained for Alice-Leone Moats a berth in Hollywood, where she has gone to write the dialogue of a picture called "Coming Out Party." Her book was published by Knopf not long back.

"I've read the papers carefully—I thought I knew all about it—BUT—"not until I read this book did I understand why the things that have been happening in Washington are happening—what the President and the men around him are really trying to accomplish.

"This man Lindley not only makes it exciting but he makes it clear. He's known the President and the men of the 'Brains Trust' intimately since long before Inauguration Day. He gave me real pictures of the men and the policies controlling my future. No one could possibly have the thrilling picture of the last year without reading as good a consecutive narrative as this."

Pancakes of Delicious Varieties Provide Fillip to Late Suppers

A la Dejazet and German Types Repay Efforts of Housewives.

PANCAKES have been graduated from the breakfast table. Plain cornmeal, wheat and bran griddle cakes still give zip to the first meal of the day on wintry mornings. But several other delicious varieties, too elaborate for the ordinary breakfast, add a pleasing fillip to late impromptu suppers.

Pancakes a la dejazet and German pancakes are among the more elaborate types. Both require considerable effort and skill in the making, but are well worth the time and the pains taken.

Cornmeal griddle cakes, as inexpensive as they are appetizing, seem an entirely new breakfast dish when they are served with cream cheese and spicy apple butter. This unusual combination is delightfully piquant when the cakes are piping hot.

Want to try some pancakes a la dejazet? Here's the recipe: Work 8 ounces of flour with a pint of boiling milk in a saucepan until it becomes a smooth paste, then quickly add 4½ ounces of butter, 4 ounces of sugar and a pinch of salt. Place the saucepan on the fire and stir the ingredients until they become thick and detached from the sides, then remove from the fire. When the preparation is cold add 12 egg yolks, 4 ounces of sugar, a finely chopped orange peel and 10 egg whites beaten to a stiff froth.

Butter Frying Pans Lightly.

Heat two small frying pans and butter them lightly with a brush. Pour a thin layer of the pancake batter into each and cook in a brisk oven, turning the cake when it is half done. Drain the pancake onto a cloth and continue using the batter until three-fourths of it has been cooked. Soak the pancakes with maraschino and cover with a layer of English coffee cream, with vanilla added. Then dress them one on top of the other, finishing with a pancake. Cover the whole with the remainder of the preparation. Pour butter over the mound and brown in a hot oven, placing another dish beneath the one holding the pancakes. Sprinkle with sugar and glaze until they attain a fine color. *Serve with apricot sauce.

German pancakes are made as follows: To six ounces of flour add eight egg yolks, two tablespoons of sugar and four tablespoons of melted butter. Stir until smooth. Dilute the mixture with a gill and three-quarters of double cream and add five beaten egg whites and four tablespoons of whipped cream. Butter lightly the bottom of two medium pans. Heat and pour a thin layer of the batter into each, spreading over the entire surface, and place in a hot oven. When half done turn them over to cook them evenly on both sides. As soon as they are finished, drain them on a cloth, bestrew with sugar and dress on a dish.

Cornmeal Griddle Cakes.

An excellent recipe for cornmeal griddle cakes requires these ingredients:

1 cup boiling water
½ cup white cornmeal
1 tablespoon sugar
½ teaspoon salt
1 egg
¾ cup milk
1 cup flour
3 teaspoons baking powder

Pour the boiling water over the cornmeal, sugar and salt; mix well. Let stand until cool. Add beaten yolk, milk, and flour and baking powder sifted together. Add melted shortening and mix well. Fold in beaten egg white. Bake on a moderately hot griddle slightly longer than plain griddle cakes. And don't forget the cream cheese and apple butter for a festive Sunday morning breakfast.

The recipe for wheat cakes is:

1 cup sifted flour
1 egg well beaten
½ teaspoon soda
1 cup thick, sour milk or buttermilk
½ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon melted butter or other shortening

Delicious With Preserves.

Sift flour once, measure, add soda and salt, and sift again. Combine egg and milk and add to flour gradually, stirring only until smooth. Add shortening. Bake on hot, well-greased griddle. These proportions make 12 cakes. They're delicious when served with peach preserves.

Bran pancakes offer a bit of variety to the pancake list:

1¾ cups milk
1 cup bran
1½ cups sifted flour
3 teaspoons baking powder
2 teaspoons sugar
1 teaspoon salt
2 eggs, well beaten
1 tablespoon melted butter

Pour milk over bran. Sift flour once, measure, add baking powder, sugar and salt, and sift again. Add eggs to bran mixture. Add flour and blend. Add butter. Bake on hot well-greased griddle. This makes 24 cakes.

Experienced Food Buyers Find Shopping List Handy

The experienced and efficient food-buyer has a carefully prepared list of her needs when she enters the market. This enables the salesmen to serve her in about half the time required if she makes her selections haphazardly.

This list may be changed at the housewife's discretion after she has looked over the market's wares. The required staples are usually known before she leaves her kitchen, but it is often wise to stock up on articles offered at specially low prices.

Perishables can not be definitely decided upon in advance because they are so strongly influenced by climatic and shipping conditions.

Imported China and Silver Give Charming Setting at Dinner Party

IMPORTED china, rock crystal glassware and gleaming silver on Italian cut-work cloth make a charming setting for the small, informal dinner.

The stark simplicity of the silver's design contrasts beautifully with the china's floral decoration. The floral motif is repeated in the glassware's brilliant cut. Even the linen crash cloth is of exquisite flower patterns.

The rose clusters on the china are silhouetted against a rich ivory background, with narrow gold bands.

"Pointed antique" is the name of the silver's design, which has been in vogue for generations. With its shining surface completely devoid of ornamentation, it is conservatism at its best.

This table service, with tall candles in squat double holders, and informal arrangement of flowers in a shallow bowl, would be ideal for the festive Thanksgiving feast.

No matter how excellent the food, the table appointments must be attractive if the hostess wishes to entertain well. When her guests enter the dining room it is the china, silver and glassware that first engage their attention. If these create an impression of beauty, the success of the meal is assured.

Floral patterned china and cut glassware are just as suitable for luncheon as for dinner service. Unadorned silver is appropriate for any occasion. That's the nice thing about choosing a pattern that doesn't depend upon ornate carving for attractiveness.

Money Can Be Saved By Careful Planning

In feeding children, when every cent must be well spent, buy milk, bread and cereals, vegetables and fruit. Eggs and meat may be used sparingly.

Thrift suggestions it is well to remember are: A tall can of evaporated milk with an equal amount of water added is as good for children as one quart of pasteurized whole milk, and may be used in soups, desserts, cocoa, and to drink.

Four pounds of potatoes may be used in place of one middle-sized loaf of bread.

Day-old bread is better for children than fresh bread, and costs less.

Raw fruit or raw vegetables should be eaten by children every day; raw cabbage chopped with grated raw carrots is good, and red cabbage has more iron than white cabbage.

Use the water in which pared and leafy vegetables are cooked for soup stock.

In place of meat, use cheese, fish or dried beans, dried peas or lentils. Soak dried vegetables 12 hours and they will cook in less than an hour.

Tomatoes are often used as a vegetable, but they are really a fruit, and, fresh or canned, may be used in place of oranges.

Buy food loose instead of in boxes whenever possible, as it is cheaper.

Eggs Tasty at Any Meal Served in Many Recipes

Eggs may be served at any meal and in a variety of ways. Probably no other single food can be utilized in a greater number of dishes. Whether alone, or with ham or bacon, in omelets, souffles or croquettes, eggs may appear in the main dish of any meal.

For soft cooked eggs or for hard cooked eggs with tender whites, start the eggs in cold water to cover. Heat the water gradually to simmering, but do not let it boil. Boiling temperature toughens whites of eggs. The temperature of the water should not be allowed to go higher than 185 degrees Fahrenheit.

For soft cooked eggs, remove the water from the fire when it simmers, cover the pan, let the eggs stand from 6 to 8 minutes. The number of eggs and quantity of water affect the rate at which the eggs cook. For hard-boiled eggs let the water remain over low fire for 30 minutes after it first simmers.

To poach eggs, break them into sufficient boiling salted water to cover, in a shallow pan, and remove immediately from fire. Cover and let stand for about 5 minutets. Remove eggs from water carefully, with perforated spoon.

To fry eggs, break them into a moderately hot pan containing bacon or other fat, and cook over low fire. If the eggs are to be cooked over the top, dip up the hot fat with a spoon and pour it over yolks until a coating is formed.

For shirred or baked eggs, break into shallow buttered baking dish or ramekin, dot with butter and sprinkle with salt and pepper. Place the dish in a pan of water and bake in moderate oven, at 350 degrees Fahrenheit, until whites of eggs are set.

Cleaning Huge Chimneys Taxes Ingenious Brains

home, uncouples his hoses and attachments, starts a giant vacuum sweeper a-burbling behind his truck, and proceeds very scientifically to suck the soot down your chimney into his container. He stands by and smokes his pipe during the process, collects his fee, and on he goes to the next appointment.

Much less romantic, but highly efficient—that's progress.

One local firm, however, has an ancient sweep who still clings to his brush and bucket, scorning all "science." His only difficulty is in getting customers who will permit him to apply his old-fashioned methods on their flues.

More highly specialized, however, and requiring skill and ingenuity as well as steel nerves, is the job of banding, pointing-up or scraping some of the 600-foot hotel and factory chimneys of Washington, a hazardous undertaking required annually, since as much as 52 sugar barrels of soot were recently removed from one stack. This work, rigging or steeplejacking, has few practitioners in the city.

Here is an account given by one man who spent almost a quarter of a century working on flagpoles, steeples and chimneys. In all this time, it seems, there would have been many thrills and close escapes, so his first statements were startling:

"I've never had a scare! I've never had a fall! I've never had a man who worked for me hurt! Carelessness is the cause of accident, someone's oversight. If conditions are determined first, there is no danger. I will guarantee to rig Washington's monument for you with seven men and two scaffolds in four hours, clean to the capstone, and come down without a man even scratched."

Hand-Over-Hand Progress.

He explained the method of "banding" a stack with iron, and attaching thereto a square scaffold, tightened with a turnbuckle, at a height of five or six feet from the ground; then repeating the process with a second band, and, with or without a second scaffold, as high above the first as can be reached, and mounting to the top by this hand-over-hand process. If then, besides outside pointing-up or painting, the stack needs inside scraping, a simple apparatus, consisting of hooks and "bo'sn's chair," is lowered down inside, once the top is reached. Beginning at the top with brush and scraper, the man lowers himself as he works, outfitted with gas mask and respirator, the loose accumulation of soot being blown by natural draft out the top or falling to the bottom of the stack to be carried out later.

This rigging method is only used, however, on chimnneys that are so obstructed that free passage of a "shot" or toy balloons is impossible—and only after observation, made with a spyglass from a distance, discloses that the top coping is strong.

The alternate method of "shooting a line," when the stack is clear, requires only that a light line be shot out over the top edge of the stack. Stronger and stronger lines are pulled up and over, until ropes strong enough to support a man and chair have gone across. This method sometimes fails, and the "balloon" is used, the most interesting and ingenious method.

Toy Balloons Ascend

Half a dozen toy balloons, filled with gas (if the natural draft in the chimney is not strong enough to carry them upward filled only with air), are tied to a light cord. Beneath is suspended another ball of slightly heavier cord, adjusted to unroll when violently jerked. A simple pointed wire, bent so it will dance about and rip the balloons when the cord is yanked, is fastened to the string.

The balloons ascend and when they are well over the top of the stack the cord is jerked several times. The balloons, left unbroken, dragged down by the weight of the balls of cord, fall against the outside of the stack. This causes the ball of cord to unravel to the ground. Stronger and stronger cords are then pulled up and over, as in the shooting process described previously. The man and his chair go up first and work downward.

Here's Where Pull Spells "Push."

One of the largest downtown department stores has a quartet of entrance portals labeled "Push." Imagine the collective embarrassment of a trustful public which daily discovers that its faith has been misplaced—because not one of the legends is true. Every door must be pulled to open!

McGoofey's First Reader

By H. I. Phillips.

WHAT have we here?

We have hats.

What kind of hats?

Will women actually wear them?

Oh, yes.

Of their own free will?

Yes, they will wear them of their own free will.

What is the idea of women wearing funny hats like these? Are they going to a masquerade party or mardi gras?

No. They are hats for regular street wear. But the women are not to blame.

Why aren't the women to blame?

Because these are the only kind of hats a woman can buy just now.

Who is to blame for the funny hats?

The Paris hat designers.

Are the hat designers in their right minds?

Probably not.

Do you suppose that the hat designers may have designed these hats to pay an election bet or something?

It is hard to think of any reason that would seem justifiable.

How are the women of America accepting the new hat styles for fall and winter?

They are taking them as philosophically as possible. Nothing can be done about it.

After the hats pass out of style, what can be done with them?

They will make great pie plates or something.

Science Helps Select Phone Exchange Names

sideration must be given to selecting designations that minimize confusion to the vanishing point.

Atlantic was selected for its fitness in the scheme of central offices as were District, Metropolitan and National. The selection of National is obvious, this being the National Capital. Decatur is an outstanding historical name of National significance while Emerson and Shepherd are historically significant because of outstanding men who have been connected with the District government.

The Georgia central office received its name from the fact that it serves largely the area of which Georgia avenue is the main feeder. The West and North central offices were given these names in the early development of the telephone industry when they were the northernmost and most central offices in the city. The Wisconsin central office also receives its name from its location. Sterling, the last name chosen for a central office, while it has no local or historical signficance, is an excellent example of a selection because of phonetic clearness.

Mystery Beckons From Walls Surrounding Deserted Houses

High brick walls always add an air of mystery to deserted homes. The walls are the last stand of departing grandeur. They arouse keen curiosity to know what lies behind. Almost timidly one opens the latticed wall gate. Beyond is abandonment and ruin, but beauty of a kind.

Two long rows of Lombardy poplars line the walls from street to alley. The grass is gray, patchy; loose bricks from the walk are scattered. A badly rusted pump squeaks mournfully when its handle is lifted. One drops it quickly, so human is the sound.

Overlooking the yard is a double-storied side-porch. A lacy, fruit-and-flower pattern grill-work, in cast iron, rails the porch. These delicate traceries in iron seem to be drawn in charcoal against the stone walls of the house rather than some 10 feet this side. They are a marvelous type of disappearing artistry.

Floral Shop's Miniature Lake Is "Trade-Mark" After 28 Years

New 28 years ago, the marine and floral window display of a downtown florist's shop has now become a trade-mark." A miniature lake with goldfish and baby alligators, the latter at times almost camouflaged amid fernery and moss on the tiny banks, is set in the window. Every two or three years the scene is reconstructed—with new plants, the lake bottom repainted and the bridge rebuilt.

The alligators, now outgrown their pigmy habitat, are exchanged for babies of the species. The fish still alive are put into the new lake.

Contract Players Here Study Developments in Tournament.

> I Sometimes think that never Bids so Bad

> For Each and Every Suit that they have named,
> Has seemed to set my Rivals doubling Mad.
> —Rubaiyat of Bridge.

IN the final compilation of scores by Russell J. Baldwin, contract players here are taking stock of developments shown in the third annual tournament of the Washington Bridge League, recently concluded. Each of the six sessions of the tournament—three devoted to pair contests and three to team-of-four plays—brought out a large and representative group of recognized leading players of the Capital and vicinity. The meet was a success both from the standpoint of management and play.

The winners in the team championship led from the first, although their lead when going into the final session was small and slightly precarious. They left no doubt of their ability, however, in the concluding event by winning 15 out of 20 boards. In consequence, the name of a woman; in fact, the names of two women, will be engraved for the first time on the Eynon Bowl, the handsome trophy presented by "Eddie" Eynon, the league's first president.

Eleven teams survived the eliminations of the first two sessions and entered the final competition. Their scores were:

Dr. and Mrs. L. W. Lord, Mr. and Mrs. James H. Lemon, 49.5.

Mrs. V. A. Clarke and Leroy Thurtell, V. A. Clarke and A. P. Stockvis, 43.5.

W. R. Lewis and Lawrence Cake, Dr. E. B. Conolly and S. F. Gerber, 41.

Capt. and Mrs. C. W. Dietz, Maj. and Mrs. E. V. Littig, 40.

A. P. Brooks and T. B. Williams, A. B. Galt and O. L. Veerhoff, 39.5.

Col. A. S. Perkins and Maj. E. B. Gray, U. S. A., Tom Hamlin and Commander F. G. Blaisdell, 39.5.

H. L. Shepard and C. L. Birgfeld, Mrs. H. L. Shepard and R. H. Wood, 39.5.

Fred Whalen and Dr. W. D. Sullivan, H. P. Brown and William Foster, 39.

Mrs. Eugene "Pat" Nolan and Mrs. M. C. Robinson, Mrs. Alma Byrne and Saul Nelson, 35.5.

W. C. Whittle and G. E. Getty, J. C. Davidson and M. Lake, 35.

Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Potts, Mrs. J. I. Power and E. B. Martin, 33.

The pair championship was anybody's race until well toward the close of the contest, with a different pair in the lead at the close of each session. Mrs. Alma Byrne and Alfred Stidham were out in front handily when the first afternoon's play was over. At the end of the second day of the pair event two Army wives, Mrs. D. Lee Hooper and Mrs. C. C. Morgan, had crowded to the front. In the third session Mr. and Mrs. Tom Hamlin charged forward from sixth position, and, making a garrison finish, won by about half a board over Roy Thurtell and "Dick" Wood, who had been cantering along among the leaders throughout. In fact, the eight leading pairs finished fairly well bunched as follows:

Mr. and Mrs. Tom Hamlin, 419.1.

Leroy Thurtell and R. H. Wood, 414.4.

Mrs. D. L. Hooper and Mrs. C. C. Morgan, 412.2.

Mrs. R. C. Jones and Mrs. M. R. West, 408.5.

Dr. E. B. Conolly and A. P. Stockvis, 402.8.

Mrs. Alma Byrne and Alfred Stidham, 398.9.

Mrs. Paul Collins and H. L. Shepard, 398.5.

Mrs. Eugene Nolan and Mrs. M. C. Robinson, 395.0.

The closest fight of the tournament was the new intermediate event, which Miss Florence Brooks and Miss Minnie Fremgen won by a fraction of a point from James S. Surrock and Tirso Santos, jr., with Mrs. T. E. Thompson and M. W. Parker, jr., leaders in the first session, finishing third. A feature of the final session was the fine playing of Dr. F. M. Weida and J. H. Taylor, of George Washington University.

The scores follow:

Miss F. Brooke and Miss M. Fremgen, 153.5.

J. S. Surrock and T. Santos, jr., 152.7.

Mrs. T. E. Thompson and M. W. Parker, jr., 146.4.

Dr. F. M. Weida and J. H. Taylor, 133.9.

Mrs. J. B. Harrington and Mrs. Elmer Foss, 132.4.

Mrs. E. M. Yates and Miss M. E. Lippitt, 128.5.

E. G. Hardebeck and W. H. Gordon, 124.9.

Mrs. E. L. Weinert and Carle Turner, 123.1.

Miss Ruby B. Martin and Miss Helen Vrooman, 122.7.

Miss Helen Freeman and Walter Baumford, 119.0.

Lieut. Comdr. W. A. Corley, president of the league has announced that the formal presentation of trophies to the winners will be made at the first regular meeting of the league in the Hotel Shoreham, December 6.

The Maryland State championship games will be played at the Emerson Hotel, Baltimore, next Friday and Saturday. There will be three events, the pair championship, the team championship and, for the first time, an intermediate event similar to the one introduced by the Washington Bridge League in its recent tournament. In all events a percentage of the top-score players in each session, dependent upon the total number of entries, will qualify directly for the finals.

The finals will be held at the Cavendish Bridge Club, 704 Cathedral street, Baltimore, at a time to be determined by the qualifiers. Pair and intermediate events will be held afternoons on the dates stated and team matches evenings only.

The Schoefield Cup, at present held by two of Washington's best players, Mrs. M. R. West and Mrs. R. O. Jones, is the trophy in the pair match, while the Hendler Cup will be at stake in the team match. Invitations have been extended to Washington players to participate and it is expected a large delegation will go to the Monumental City for the events. Mrs. West and Mrs. Jones will defend their title.

W. Somerset Maugham, distinguished English writer, comes strongly to the defense of bridge players, against the charge of those persons who have never been able to learn the game, that it is a time-waster, played only by a sort of queer, fanatic folk. In his introduction to the "Traveler's Library," issued last summer, Mr. Maugham says:

"The unhappy persons who have no card sense say that playing cards is a waste of time, but it is never a waste of time to amuse oneself. And, besides, as the day has 24 hours and the week 7 days, there is always a certain amount of time to be wasted.

"It is impossible not to feel sorry for people who have no head for cards. Love is for the young, and affection is but a frigid solace to a pining heart. Sports demand physical vigor. To have learnt to play a good game of bridge is the safest insurance against the tedium of old age. Throughout life one may find in cards endless entertainment and an occupation for idle hours that rests the mind from care and pleasantly exercises the intelligence.

"For the people who say that only the stupid can play cards err; they do not know what decision, what quickness of apprehension, what judgment, what knowledge of character, are required to play a hand perfectly. The good card player trusts his intuition as implicitly as M. Bergson, but he calls it a hunch; the brilliant card player has a gift as specific as the poet's; he, too, is born, not made.

"The student of human nature can find endless matter for observation in the behavior of his fellow card players. Meanness and generosity, prudence and audacity, courage and timidity, weakness and strength; all these men show at the card table according to their nature; and because they are intent upon the game, drop the mask they wear in the ordinary affairs of life.

"Few are so deep that you do not know the essential facts about them after a few rubbers of bridge. The card table is a very good school for the study of mankind."

* * * *

In the seventh of the series of games played in the first half of the Federal Bridge League's tournament at the Federal Clubhouse, Karl Greene's Aliens again forged to the front and recaptured first place from Harry Wensel's Phychems, of the Bureau of Standards. The latter held the post of honor for one week only and then by just one-half a board. Karl's crew came back at them on the following week, however, by winning four more boards than their adversaries, which gave them an advantage of three and one-half boards with a percentage of .656, as against .624 for the Phychems, who now manage to hold second place by a margin of one-half a board only over the on-coming Treasury Amateurs. The latter registered a percentage of .618.

Difficult Combinations Can Be Simplified by Analysis.

By Ely Culbertson.

FROM time to time I have written in these columns of the vast importance to the card player of counting out the distribution of the hands he can not see. The importance of this can not be overestimated, for it causes the most difficult of playing combinations to become simple problems at double dummy, wherein all necessity for guessing (which will fail as often as it will win) becomes eliminated, and any position may be reduced to a certainty.

Bridge is exceptionally well-suited to accurate analysis of adverse distributions, because of the division into 13 tricks of four cards each, four suits of 13 cards each, and four hands which contain all the cards in the pack, so that every card must be in play and, therefore, accountable.

But it is not always sufficient to draw conclusions merely from inferences in the bidding, the leads which are made during the course of play, and the plays themselves. Sometimes we must create further clues for ourselves, when the usual ones prove inadequate.

First Imaginary Picture.

Our first imaginary picture of the closed hands must, of course, come from the bidding. Particularly when one player has bid two suits, we can assume him to hold approximately nine cards in those two suits, and a few plays are likely to reveal the division of the other four.

Then, during the course of the play, whenever any player can no longer follow to some suit or other, we immediately receive an exact count on the number of cards in that suit held by each player, and by the simple expedient of adding together all the cards we have been able to locate and subtracting that number from 13, we can further reduce the number of doubtful suit lengths.

Third, we can usually tell the approximate length of a suit which is led by the card led, a small card usually showing a long suit of four cards or more, and an intermediate card showing a short suit of one, two or three cards. When our deductions have covered three suits, we can count the fourth by a process of elimination. There is nothing difficult about this technique; it requires nothing more than attention.

Players Forget to Count.

But so few persons think consciously and in an orderly fashion that many players actually forget to count, thereby being brought to the extreme of taking unnecessary finesses at some times and refusing indicated finesses at others.

The following deal illustrates a principle which no student can afford to overlook. By delaying a decision until every one of the possible "sign posts" of counting hand distributions has been brought to light, it is possible to reduce what might otherwise be a guess to an indicated finesse, which is just as clear as though the player into whose hand it is necessary to finesse had shown out of the suit.

South, Dealer.
East and West vulnerable.

	♠ 8 6 2 ♡ K 10 7 ♢ A Q 10 4 ♣ K 10 8
♠ Q J 10 7 5 ♡ 6 4 ♢ J 8 3 2 ♣ 7 5	N W E S	♠ K 4 ♡ Q J 9 8 ♢ 7 5 ♣ Q J 9 6 3
	♠ A 9 3 ♡ A 5 3 2 ♢ K 9 6 ♣ A 4 2

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1NT	Pass	2NT	Pass
3NT	Pass	Pass	Pass

There is nothing tell-tale in the bidding. South, with no biddable suit, opens one no-trump. North's 2½ honor-tricks justify a raise to 2, and South, with ½ honor-trick over the 3 required for his bid, bids 3.

West opens the Queen of spades, which East covers with the King in order to avoid blocking the suit. South holds up his Ace, a play which can cost him nothing because he has no way of ridding himself of his two spade losers, and he may possibly be able to prevent the hand which holds the long spade suit from ever regaining the lead after that suit has been established. East and West continue the spades, and South's Ace wins the third round, on which East shows out. This is the first sign post. West's hand pattern included five spades, and East's two.

Nine Tricks Necessary.

South has to win nine tricks for his contract. He has surely one trick in spades, three in diamonds and two each in hearts and clubs. If the adverse hearts are divided 3 and 3, his long heart will prove to be the ninth trick. The same is true of diamonds, with the added advantage of a possible finesse in case West holds four diamonds headed by the Knave. These are the possibilities, but South has no basis for choosing any one of them; he can only guess at this point.

Here is how he goes about obtaining a count which will remove this guess. He leads a heart toward Dummy, and plays the Ten. This serves a double purpose, for it keeps West, who holds the set up spade suit, out of the lead. East wins the Knave of hearts and returns the Queen.

Now if the hearts are divided South is safe, but meanwhile he goes about developing other possibilities. He takes the Ace of hearts, and leads a club, again toward Dummy. Again he finesses the Ten, which East wins with the Knave, returning a third round of hearts. On this lead West throws a spade, and the count becomes more exact. West originally held five spades, and he followed suit to hearts only twice, which leaves six cards in his hand divided between diamonds and clubs.

South now plays the Ace and King of clubs, and on the last club West again throws a spade. And now the count is complete. West had five spades, two hearts and two clubs. Nine from 13 leaves four—he had four diamonds. South leads a small diamond to the Queen and a small diamond from Dummy back to his King. The Knave has not fallen, but there are only two diamonds left in the East and West hands, and West has them both. A small diamond is therefore led toward Dummy and the Ten finessed, to which trick East, of course, can not even follow, so that it must win. Dummy's Ace of diamonds is the ninth trick.

Play Beautifully Simple.

South's play of this hand is beautifully simple and absolutely safe. By merely giving up all the tricks he was forced to lose in any case, South was able to create for himself every bit of tell-tale evidence it is possible to use in the play of the hand.

I wish to reiterate the statement that nothing in the game of Bridge is easier than obtaining a count. None of the extreme concentration that is necessary in analyzing a squeeze position is necessary. We must simply be able to count 13, and, what is more important, to remember to do so. A perfect count is not possible on a great many hands, but on a correspondingly great number it is possible, and in either case close attention to getting as complete a count as possible is indispensable to skillful play.

Spectacles Urged for Servants To Keep Them From Overeating

These excerpts are from the Cook's Oracle and Housekeeper's Manual, published in London in 1829:

"To guard against 'la gourmandise' of the second table, provide each of your servants with a large pair of spectacles of the highest magnifying power, and never permit them to sit down to any meal without wearing them. They will make a lark look as large as a fowl, a goose as big as a swan, a leg of mutton as large as a hind quarter of beef, a twopenny loaf as large as a quartern.

"As philosophers assure you that even pain is only imaginary, we may justly believe the same of hunger. If a servant who eats no more than 1 pound of food, imagines, by the aid of these glasses, that he has eaten 3 pounds, his hunger will be as fully satisfied—and the addition to your optician's account will soon be overpaid by the subtraction from your butcher's and baker's.

"The greatest care should be taken by the man of fashion, that his cook's health be preserved. One hundredth part of the attention usually bestowed on his dog, or his horse, will suffice to regulate her animal system."

Russian Embassy Rings With Spirit Hoofbeats

wanted to drown all idea of the outside world these windows were covered with a mammoth looking glass. The effect was startling. The glasses reflected part of the state room, with its shimmering Corinthian columns bedecked in gold leaf and white ivory.

"The glory that was Greece, and the grandeur that was Rome" were nothing compared to the magnificence that was Russia when a Russian Ambassador held forth in regal splendor, in the days of the Czar. Now, it comes as a strange quirk of fate that the old aristocratic Imperial Russian Embassy will fall into the possession of a proletarian regime, U. S. S. R.

The man who has charge of the embassy now—Col. Krynitsky—was indentified with the old Czaristic regime. In his role of custodian he thinks back upon the old days and wonders what effect such rich surroundings will have upon a Soviet ambassador (and vice versa).

Colonel Stands Upon Own Ground.

The colonel stands upon his own ground in having these thoughts. It is true that he came to America as an emissary of the Russian government. It is true, furthermore, that he came loaded with money. He came to purchase munitions of war, when Russia was an ally of America, and one of his purchases alone was worth a king's ransom. Col. Krynitsky—he was a captain then—was authorized to purchase time fuses.

That may not sound like much, purchasing time fuses. Yet, when it is known that the colonel at one time ordered 11,000,000 time fuses—and that each time fuse cost $4,000, it is readily seen he was a responsible person.

The colonel is now a plain American citizen acting as custodian for the Russian Embassy, appointed by the Kerensky government.

He is an intelligent man, a metallurgist at the Bureau of Standards—and he is all for America.

Sometimes, at night, the colonel himself believes that he can hear "the Czar's horses." He has heard so many tales he must believe some of them himself.

Of course, there are no Czar's horses at the Russian Embassy, just as there is no Czar at the Imperial Palace in St. Petersburg, which is now Leningrad.

There are no Czar's horses, and there is no Czar, but in Washington there is an embassy, a great, empty, yawning embassy—with 60 rooms, all covered with dust—and it awaits the call from a new ambassador.

Jolly Bachelor Ambassadors.

If the new ambassador is a bachelor, it might be that the good old days will come again—for Russian ambassadors, when they were bachelors, gave Washington the thrill of thrills. The legend began when one of the first Russian diplomats came to America. He, Baron Alexander de Bodisco, was a bachelor. Stories of his lavish parties, embassy balls and of his romance and romancing are told even now, after a lapse of a hundred years.

Not long ago there was resurrected a letter describing a ball in the first Russian Embassy, which was then Beall street, now O street, in Georgetown. That ball, with a thousand candles to light the ballroom, was only a forerunner of the great balls to be staged in the last Russian Embassy, on Sixteenth street.

It would take probably $100,000 to put the Russian Embassy in habitable shape. Whatever happens, whether the historic structure is permitted to remain a mausoleum of a deceased governmental idea, or its echoes resound to the music of embassy balls or babel of trade parleys, strange things seem in the offing, but it seems as though, in any event, the Czar's horses will be effectively stilled—permanently stabled.

Soda Clerks Find Free Drinks Spoil Taste for Water Straight

Don't envy the soda clerk his privilege of free drinks. It's a curse, several confessed. The temptation to reach for a root-beer or a cherry-smash instead of a glass of water when thirsty turns into a health-damaging habit—even among old-timers behind the fountain, who say they should know better. A malted-milk or two a day—if you have served a hundred or two in between, besides countless sodas and sandwiches—and there goes one's appetite.

"Sure, we get along," they said, "but don't envy us our job. It's not all fun!"

their impudence—frisky hop-o'-my-thumbs, in frill-necked coats of shiny black or brown. One smallest ball of fur among them runs out of her pen into the bosom of Lavendar Delphinium. Here is a mixture of races for you with no international complications! Mme. L. Delphinium, prize Persian of loveliest blue, is a mother as well as a lady. She washes little Pommy from nose to tail tip.

"She is always that way," brags Miss Payne. "And Blue Kitsy will nurse them right along with her own kittens."

A loud cackling down a rear hill betrays the presence of chickens at Rosedere. "Nearly a hundred we have now," Miss Hunt informs you. A faraway, homesick look suddenly dims her blue eyes. In misguided sympathy you envisage a thatched cottage in a quaint English garden luring her home. "I do wish," she sighs, "I had time to raise fish! Maybe I shall some day."

A strange creature suddenly rubs your ankle. Washed-out gray fur, ears, tail and meow just like the cats you have always sidestepped. But worse! One eye closed tight.

"Well, hello, One-Eye!" Miss Hunt hails this monstrosity. Miss Payne strokes its plebeian head. "This is the only thing at Rosedere," they explain, "that's not pure-blooded."

"She came with the place," says Miss Payne. "Greeted us on arrival."

"And several days later," adds Miss Hunt, "six tiny kittens followed her out from under the porch."

Foes Fought Departure Of Maryland Colonists

other trees, and that flowers, herbs, wild nuts and other attractions were abundant. What a contrast between this arrival and that of the Pilgrims on the bleak November shores of Massachusetts!

March 25 usually is given as the date of settlement of Maryland, but the colonists had been in the vicinity virtually three weeks before then. It was on that date, however, that they went ashore in force and celebrated the first mass, frequently pictured by artists. St. Clements Island then was estimated by Father White to have an area of 400 acres.

Settlement Delayed.

It was not the site of the permanent settlement, which was selected on the mainland and named St. Marys. A Virginian, Henry Fleet, who spoke the Indian tongues, accompanied Gov. Calvert and pointed out this site, which Father White described as "a spot so charming in its situation that Europe itself can scarcely show one to surpass it." It was about 30 miles from the mouth of the Potomac River, and was bought from the Indians with axes, hatchets and "several yards of cloth."

The Indians gave the colonists corn and a friendly relationship thus was established. Lord Baltimore had given instructions for such fair dealing, a policy both honorable and fruitful of good results.

Sunken Treasure Ships Hold Untold Treasures

seeker of riches across the Andes to the Pacific side of South America to other treasure troves equally as lucrative and sinister. Off the west coast of Haumblin Island, 100 miles south of Chile, lies the Sakkarah, German Kosmos Line steamer, which, under mysterious circumstances, stranded in April, 1902. Her cargo papers list her as being laden with nearly $330,000 in gold bullion and $67,000 worth of nitrate which she was transporting to Hamburg. This wreck remains unsalvaged.

Sponge Shrouds Treasure.

Let us turn back to the former land of Machado—Cuba—where an example of a tempting treasure well worth the cost of a salvaging expedition lies completely overgrown with sponge on a coral reef just off the coast of the island republic. The Spanish war vessel, Don Carlos III, in the fall of 1812, carrying much treasure in silver, gold, and copper coin, struck a reef and its panic-stricken crew strove madly to save the ship, its treasure and themselves by cutting cannon lashings and throwing the guns into the bay. Everything movable was thrown overboard, but to no avail. With hope lost, the officers and crew took to the boats, leaving the proud man of war, with all its treasure, to ill-fated destiny.

The inland plateau lakes of South America hold unsolved mysteries and unsalvaged treasure hoards. Here the eyes of treasure hunters became dazzled with visions of gold, silver and gems, induced by tales of secret Andean trails, from which, through fear of the early Spaniards, fortunes in gems and precious metal were hurled by the Indians into mountain lakes.

High in the Bolivian Andes, lies a lake on the summit of Mount Soratu, 16,200 feet above the sea. Indian tradition handed down from generation to generation, tells that into these placid waters was hurled vast treasures in gold and silver, at the time when the Inca Emperor Atahulpa was murdered by the Spanish conquistadores. Nearby, in the turbid waters of Late Titicaca, 80 fathoms deep, lies treasure beyond the dreams of avarice—which rivals those the fabled valley of the Roc in the day of Sinbad the Sailor—carried on the backs of llamas from the Temple of the Sun at Cuxco.

Peru Bars Gold Hunters.

Another fortune of old Peru—lost since the days of Pizarro and Almagro—lies somewhere in the bed of the upper branches of the Huatanay River. Gold statues and precious gems, silver vases, cups and ingots—a vast hidden treasure of the Inca Indians. This treasure, according to the Peruvian government, is estimated at $3,700,000—but even today, Peru dares not permit foreigners to search for the colossal hoard, lest the memories of fallen greatness and past cruelties set the Indians in revolt.

A few miles north of Santa Fe de Bogota, more than 9,000 feet above sea level, in the heart of the Cordilleros, lies the famous lake of El Dorado—better known as Guatavita, after the village on its shores. The lake was regarded by the Indians as the home of a divinity. Gold and emeralds were cast into the lake by the people of the region, and those who came from other communities on religious pilgrimages.

World-Wide Search Beckons.

Sunken treasure ships, now lying in silent repose deep in Davy Jones' locker, continue from age to age to dazzle adventurers, and are the bait to lure modern salvors with their batteries of pneumatic drills, coffer-dams, compressors, dynamite and pile-drivers in attempts to bring the golden haul to the water's surface.

Today large capital and unlimited patience are all that are required to place these fortunes within the reach of those treasure-hunters, who in their dreams ever hear the call of John Silver's shrill parrot cry: "Stand by to go about! Pieces-of-eight! Yo ho! Pieces-of-eight!"

Ding-How Has a Christmas Message in the Pets' Corner Today.

The Junior Post.

WASHINGTON, D. C., NOVEMBER 19, 1933.

Mr. Adult Reader, Pass on Your Junior Post to Some Child.

All Thanksgiving Number Contributions to The Junior Post Must Be in Tomorrow

Issue Will Appear on November 26; Poems, Drawings, Stories Needed

Dear Post Boys and Girls: Thanksgiving Day is just around the corner.

Tomorrow is the last day that we can receive contributions for the Thanksgiving number of The Junior Post. This issue will appear on November 26, and poems, drawings, strips and stories are needed to make it a splendid number.

So if you have started something for The Junior Post Thanksgiving number hurry and finish it before tomorrow noon. You will enjoy the issue all the more if you have tried to write or draw something for it. Even if your contribution does not appear for some reason you will have tried to help. That is what really counts. All the entries can not be used, of course, but The Junior Post staff is grateful to all who send anything for it.

The Junior Post editor had a very pleasant tenth anniversary last Wednesday and wishes to thank all who sent her letters and best wishes. Ding-How sends his thanks, too, and wants me to say that he has been interested in The Junior Post for ten years, too, but has only been the editor of the Pets' Corner for the past four years.

Read what Ding-How has to say today about The Washington Post Toy and Doll Fund. Every child who reads The Junior Post can help this fund in some way. Perhaps you have a toy or doll that you can spare so that some child less fortunate than yourself may not have a toyless Christmas this year.

You see, times have been very hard and some fathers and mothers will not be able to help Santa Claus much at Christmas. Send your toys or gifts to the Santa Claus Lady, Washington Post. After a while the Santa Claus Lady will be able to see the boys and girls who bring their gifts. But wait until you see the announcement in The Junior Post before you come.

As soon as Thanksgiving is over, we begin to think about Christmas and The Junior Post Editor is thinking of that Christmas number of this little paper. It will appear on December 24 and that gives you plenty of time to prepare your entries. Begin at once, for the first thing you know, Christmas, too, will be just around the corner.

Armistice Day.

When the war, which grew into the World War, broke out in Europe in 1914, few persons really believed that the United States would be drawn into the conflict. The various influences were too strong, however, and in April, 1917, a million men were sent to Europe, and as many more were in training on this side on November 11, 1918. The German Empire wished for an armistice (which means a truce), and the cruel slaughter ceased. The day has been declared a public holiday in about half the States.

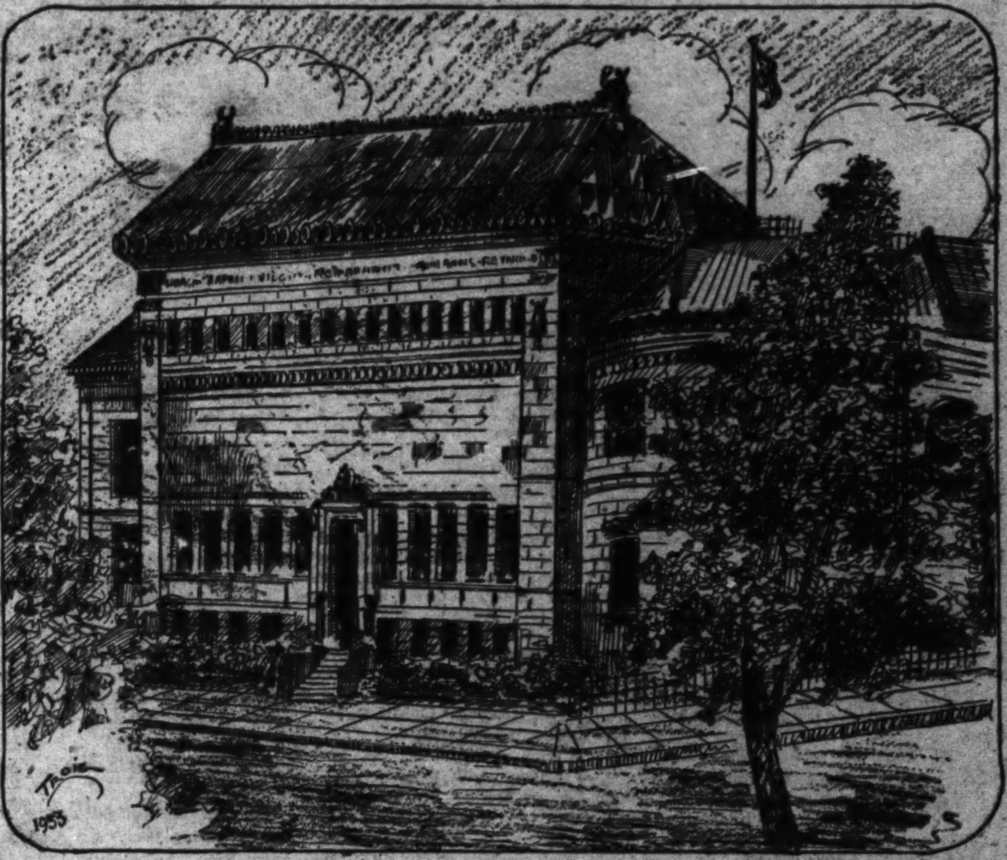
Know Your Washington—Corcoran Art Gallery



Drawn by G. G. Trois.

The Corcoran Gallery of Art was founded and endowed by the late William W. Corcoran in 1869, as a gift to the public. As time goes on its collections grow in number as well as in value. It is built of Georgia white marble, and above the entrance to the building is inscribed, "Dedicated to Art."

It is located on Seventeenth street, occupying one entire block. Every Junior Post member should be familiar with this famous structure, especially the artists, because a real lover of art can learn a lot by just browsing through the place.

Incidentally, this gallery is the meeting place of artists, besides being an art school for young students.

Nothing to Do, Until—

"Nothing to do, nothing to do," groaned Lucille. "The house is so quiet today."

"What is the matter?" asked her brother Harry, looking up from the book he was reading.

"There is nothing to do, that's all," answered his sister. "I wish I had gone down town with mother, but Lois said she might come over today so I didn't go."

"Why don't you read a book, or something," said her brother. "I'm reading a story called 'Hidden Gold.' It's all about pirates capturing a ship and finding a lot of gold and burying it on an island and——"

"Oh, bother reading," said Lucille. Just then the postman blew his whistle. Both children ran to the door.

"Nothing but The Washington Post."

"The Washington Post! Good!" said her brother like an Indian on the warpath.

"Harry Wilson," cried Lucille, "what makes you so excited? I can't see anything in The Washington Post that would make you act like that."

"The Junior Post, of course," answered her brother.

"What's The Junior Post?" asked his sister. "You never told me about it."

"Why don't you know? I thought every boy and girl knew about it. Well, it's a paper for children and they send in stories, poems and drawings and if they are good the editor will publish them. There is a prize of $1 for the best story, poem, or drawing."

"Harry, I wish you had told me about it sooner. Where is the paper? I want to see it," said Lucille.

"Why, look here!" exclaimed Lucille. "Lois is a member. Look at the story she wrote. She never told me about it."

"Are you going to send in anything to it?" asked Harry.

"You bet I am!" exclaimed Lucille. "No more days of moaning because of nothing to do for me."

The Unknown Soldier.

Armistice Day has come and gone, but the memory still lingers. Some day the memory of that terrible war will fade away, but there is one thing time can not erase. That is the memory and spirit of the Unknown Soldier.

He stands for all that is courage, bravery, and sacrifice; from him the world shall know what it is to be cast into the blazing caldron of hell; from his spirit the world will take courage. With this courage we shall conquer all God sets before us. Never shall his spirit fade. The Unknown Soldier and God stand together on the summit overlooking the world!

John Joseph Pershing.

This famous American soldier was born in Linn County, Mo., in 1860, the year of the beginning of the Civil War. He was educated at, and graduated from, Kirksville State Normal School in 1880, and West Point in 1886.

He saw service as a lieutenant of cavalry in the Apache Indian campaign in Arizona and New Mexico during 1886 and also during the Sioux compaign in 1890-91. Pershing also saw service in Cuba in 1898, in the Philippines from 1899 to 1903, and in 1905 was with Kuroki's army in Manchuria, as military attache.

He was made brigadier general in the following year. He commanded operations against the savage Moros in the Philippine Islands which resulted in their final defeat in 1913 near Bagsag. In 1915, during his absence, his wife and three daughters died in a fire. This tragedy roused the sympathy of the entire country. In 1916 he led a punitive force into Mexico, pursuing the Mexican bandit Villa, who had committed depredations on American soil, notably the Columbus raid. During September of the same year he was made a major general.

Made Full General.

When the United States declared war upon Germany and the Central Powers in April, 1917, Pershing was selected leader of the first military force sent to France. It was by the grave of the Marquis de Lafayette that he uttered his now famous words, "Lafayette, we are here." Pershing was also elevated to the permanent rank of general and was the fourth American ever to occupy this post. The three preceding him were Washington, Sherman and Sheridan.

His exploits in the world catastrophe which we call the World War are known to every one. When the allies agreed on unity of command in the spring of 1918, Pershing, acting under President Wilson's orders, tendered the American Army, then numbering 300,000 men against Germany. He preserved the American Army as an integral force despite pressure to divide it among other allied forces.

The success of the American forces in St. Mihiel salient greatly improved allied morale and the battle of the Argonne Forest was what might be termed the turning point in the war. These battles were fought under "Black Jack" Pershing's command. The nickname "Black Jack" was given him by the American soldiers as a mark of affection. When the Armistice was signed he was within sight, figuratively speaking, of his goal, Sedan.

Made Chief of Staff.

In 1921 he was appointed chief of staff of the United States Army and combined the Regular Army, the National Guard and the Permanent Reserves. He was retired on September 12, 1924, and afterward supervised a committee having charge of American war memorials in France. In 1931, Pershing published his memoirs, entitled "My Experiences in the World War." His long and colorful career has been one of great foresight and intelligence, and so it is natural that when one thinks of the World War and Armistice Day that he thinks of John Joseph Pershing.

The Unknown Soldier.

Upon that hill he there is lying,
While the world goes on untiring;
His spirit silently hovers 'round
That revered shrine upon the mound.

Millions bow their heads in awe,
Thoughtfully meditating upon that war,
In which you died a glorious death,
And breathed your last, heroic, breath.

Nations all have paid respect,
So may we all; now recollect
Thy sacred memory evermore,
And daily pray we'll never war.

May thy spirit ever linger on
To encourage us to right the wrong,
To fight our country's problems through,
And to always think of you.

Garter Snake Babies.

We're trying to think of a word. When there are two babies, they are twins. When there are three they're triplets. When there are four they are quadruplets. We want to tell you about 16 youngsters, all born at once, but we don't know what to call them.

Perhaps it doesn't matter, because they are garter snake infants, and our story is that a woman naturalist in New York has the job of bringing them up "by hand." They are fed live white worms, and each has to be fed separately, because if all were invited to dine in a group they would fight among themselves.

Human children, of course, would never be guilty of that! That's why humans are called the highest type of animal!

The Pharaohs of Egypt.

Every King of Egypt was called the "Pharaoh." He ruled as he pleased, with no help from the people at all. If he thought his laws were unjust they could do nothing. The people worshiped him also, as he was thought to have been sent by the sun god, Ra, to help and protect the people. Many people feared the Pharaoh and his laws, but when they worshiped him they forgot their fear.

The Pharaohs would give the nobles beautiful homes and lovely gifts, but they seldom paid any attention to the poorer classes.

The kings owned huge fleets of ships which the slaves would propel by means of oars or sails. These ships went down the Nile. Sometimes they would sail into the Mediterranean Sea. The kings would trade with Arabs, that went into the distant parts of Arabia and Africa. They would bring back ivory, gold, ostrich feathers and spices. The Pharaohs always lived in plenty.

'Tis Thanksgiving.

Apples falling to the ground,
Pumpkins lying all around,
Leaves are gently wafted down—
'Tis Thanksgiving.

Nuts are thick upon the ground,
Corn shocks now are golden brown,
Chilly winds are whistling round—
'Tis Thanksgiving.

In the town we hear the chime of the church bell's merry rime,
Saying it is worship time—
'Tis Thanksgiving.

The Pets' Corner.

Edited by Ding-How of Hydegree (Mascot of The Junior Post).

Bow, wow, wow, wow! Well, my two friends, members of the famous Cow Family, have started on their way to the South Pole with Admiral Byrd. They are going to keep me informed of the progress of the expedition and how the members of the Huskie Dog Eskimo family, distantly related to me, behave themselves. We yet may have some very good news from away down south in the Pets' Corner.

Mr. and Mrs. Pelican belong to the same family as Mr. Tweet Canary. But I do not think he knows them because he never has been to the South Pole and Mr. and Mrs. Pelican and their family seem to keep very close to the pole most of the time.

Mr. and Mrs. Pigeon are about our streets a great deal and seem to gather up more news than Mr. Tweet. Bow, wow! Of course, he does not gather up as much as an editor.

Bow, wow, wow! Talking about news, we have some in The Post because we are going to play Santa Claus again this year to needy children of Washington. I have been asked to give my editorial assistance and have asked all the boys and girls and all the pets of the Pet Corner to help me. Sandy Orkney Terrier Gordon says he will come down and assist the Santa Claus Lady as last year. Hop-Toy Pekingese will help, too, and so will Murphy Aitchison Fox Terrier. Murphy is such a high jumper he should be able to catch some coins for us as well as toys. Bow, wow, wow, wow!

All the pets are going to remind the boys and girls to look over their last year's toys early and put aside some for The Washington Post Toy and Doll Fund. The pets also are going to remind the boys and girls to get their gifts to The Post early so the Santa Claus lady can report to Santa Claus and decide with him just how the toys and dolls and games and books and everything else that make Christmas can be divided. Just give us a ring and we will tell you all about it.

In the meantime I hear the pets are planning for a good feast on Thanksgiving Day. Of course, an editor is above just mere food, but ice cream and turkey do seem to fit with the day. Of course, even an editor who wears eyeglasses and writes on the typewriter must eat, too.

I am making up my Christmas list and I am going to do my shopping early. Naturally I am in doubt about my Christmas card design this year just as I am every year. I will give a prize of $1 for the best design for a Ding-How Christmas card. I must have this card design not later than December 18 in order to get my cards mailed in time for Christmas. The winning design will be published in the Christmas number of the Junior Post December 24.

(Awarded $1.)

Dear Ding-How: First I want to introduce myself. My name is Patsy Neale and I was born in Tennessee near Chattanooga, but at present I live near Chattanooga. They tell me that the way I got my name was because I was born near St. Patrick's Day, so they named me Patsy.

The family that I belong to live at Washington now, but I am in Chattanooga waiting for them to come back and get me, and I sure wish they would hurry, because I used to have so much fun with the boys and I miss them more every day. In fact, when they first left, I refused to leave the house, but I guess I am getting used to being away from them because the people they left me with are very nice and seem to know what a dog wants and usually they get it for me, so I don't guess I am so bad off after all.

Well, that is a history of my life and I would like to know your history. Is there any chance, do you think?

I had a hard time sending this letter because I had to send a telegram to Margaret and tell her to send this to you and I sure hope you get it. Well, I guess I will see if I can't find a stray cat around any place. So long.

PATSY NEALE.

The Coming of Cold Weather.

Leaves are falling all around,
Yellow, golden, scarlet, brown;
Squirrels are hopping to and fro'
Storing nuts before the snow.

Days are growing cold and short,
Soon will be time for winter sport,
Skating, sleigh-riding and skiing, too,
We've done them before but they still seem new.

Nights are growing cold and long,
But still there's something I love to do;
Sit before an open fire with a book or two.

Then comes Christmas, best of all,
With its turkey steaming;
Christmas trees so long and tall,
And children's faces beaming.

Pilgrims.

When Pilgrims came across the sea,
They never thought of you or me,
For they didn't know they would succeed,
With all their wants and daily need,
In getting across the ocean wide.
To dry land on the other side.

They sailed and sailed on the wind-tossed waves,
And looked for land each of the days.
One night a sailor saw land at last,
And although the wind had torn their mast.
They struggled and landed just the same.
We should be thankful the Pilgrims came.

Did you ever read of the hardships endured,
About hunger and illness that had to be cured.
About being cold in their crude little huts
With not much to eat except berries and nuts.
Of how they went into forests each day,
To bring back meat to their homes on the bay?

I think we should very thankful be
To the Pilgrims who bravely crossed the sea,
Who bore their hardships without a word,
And were thankful to their dear Lord.
I think that we should courageous be,
And to many friends that is the key
For eternal happiness.

To the Unknown Dead.

(Awarded $1.)

Somewhere in France! Their bodies lie
Unheeded, swept by rain and snow;
For them, in France, the crosses stand,
Who fought for a cause, and were glad to go!

To pain, to death, to war, to hell,
We sent our best abroad to die,
And, somewhere in France, they fell, unknown,
And there in their graves unshrouded lie.
Why hush your tread, and why do you weep?
They are beyond the reach of tears;
The ever-present ghosts remain,
Their feet are marching down the years.

About Snakes.

One hundred and eleven species of snakes live within the borders of this "land of the free and home of the brave"—though few of us are brave in the presence of an angry serpent, and desire most of all to be free to run away. Of all creatures of the fields and forests the snakes are least understood, least appreciated and most abused. If we knew them better we might like them more—well, a little more; humans do not easily overcome the prejudices of many generations.

Snakes, however, are interesting even if not attractive. Nature lovers enjoy hunting them and capturing them in safe ways. Some of the snakes make the finest of pets! Others do not, however; it takes all kinds ot neighbors—including snakes—to make a community.

The most abundant North American serpents are the garter snakes, named thus because of their slender bodies and the customary presence of three stripes from end to end. One member of this group, the ribbon snake, of mountains east of the Mississippi River, is extremely slender, with a length, when full grown, of over 2 feet, and a body that nowhere is three-eighths of an inch through.

Garter snakes spend the winter in hibernation—that chilled sleep by which so many creatures protect themselves from severe cold. When the warm days return, all the frogs and toads in the neighborhood must "look alive" or they will soon be dead if a hungry "ribbon" spies them. In the late summer mother garter snake is probably greatly surprised when fully 50 little ones suddenly escape from her body, being born alive and hungry. Fortunately, they are able to catch earthworms for themselves at once; how a mother bird must envy a mother garter snake if she knows how little trouble the latter's babies are!

Garter snakes are wholly harmless. They soon become acquainted with their captors and will come to the door of a cage and take food right out of your fingers. Who would not be friends with a pet like that, even if it did crawl!

The Value of Time.

Of all the natural gifts of life, time is the greatest, for upon time the other gifts depend.

There are people who are thrifty with money, but throw away golden minutes as if they were of no value. Moments are golden things, for time, which we all share alike, whether rich or poor people, makes up our lives, and every bit of time we waste is a bit of wasted life.

When a minute is gone it is gone forever.

Long before you are old you will come to regret the time you wasted in your youth, but there is one thing you will never regret. You will never regret the time you gave to your books, and the attention you gave your teacher.

Men grow rich by using their money so that it brings them good interest, but nothing pays such good interest as the hour a boy or girl spends at school or with their books at home, and if there are any hours that a person would want to call back again, they are those golden hours which you can call yours today, but which all too soon will be gone, never to return.

Squirrel Goes Nutty.

Something has been seriously wrong with the telephone system in Newton, N. J. Phones rang frantically at all hours, and with nobody on the line. Queer, "spooky" noises were heard when residents lifted the receivers. Wrong numbers were numerous, and complaints poured into the telephone office.

A repairman went out and found that the trouble seemed to center in a box 40 feet up on a high pole. He climbed and looked in and almost fell off when a chattering gray streak jumped out and attacked him with tooth and claw. It was a mother squirrel, that had chosen the box as a good place in which to raise her family. She had lined the nest with insulation chewed from the wires—that's what caused all the trouble. At last reports, repairmen were trying to coax her and the family out with nuts.

The Junior Post Airship

"Well, I see the Marines have landed and have the situation in hand again," remarked the pilot of The Junior Post Airship as he tuned up his machine for the weekly jaunt around the world to pick up spot news for this column.

"How's that?" inquired the news editor, always ready to find something with which to lead off his story.

"Why, V. O. Squadron 7-m. of the Quantico Marines have won the Herbert Schiff Trophy for the maximum of safe flying," returned the pilot. "You can always depend on those lads when it comes to 'safety first.'"

"Let's fly over Quantico," the editor suggested.

"All right, that heads us south!" the pilot pointed out as he started the flight with a grand swoop upward from Bolling Field where all these little journeys begin—and end.

Darting over Georgia like a giant bird flying south for the winter, The Junior Post Airship went into slower speed when they reached Warm Springs. There was a great deal of activity there, for President and Mrs. Roosevelt are planning to spend Thanksgiving there with the victims of infantile paralysis who are finding new strength and vigor in its healing waters.

"The President is host to the whole community on Thanksgiving," remarked the editor. "He furnishes the turkeys for the dinner and everybody comes, young, old, sick and well. Last year they had 300 guests but it never bothered President and Mrs. Roosevelt in the least. Everybody had enough to eat and everybody had a good time. After dinner all sang songs and many went in swimming in the out-of-doors pool."

"Must have been cold," shouted back the pilot

"No, not so very cold," returned the other, "just the right temperature, everyone agreed."

"It is a fine place," continued the pilot, "and much of its improvement is due to President Roosevelt and his friends. It did so much to help him back to health that he was eager to pass on the good news to others."

The Junior Post Airship then turned back to North Carolina because the pilot was eager to see a man playing at Pinehurst. His interest in it was that he is William A. Julian, the new Treasurer of the United States and his name is on all the new paper money issued by Uncle Sam's big bank. Mr. Julian was having a good time with his game. It must be pleasant, anyway, to sign money. That is an occupation almost any one would enjoy.

"Gold, gold, gold!" the wings of The Junior Post Airship hummed as the ship flew on across the southern part of the country to Lower California. On the way they saw many persons digging into the ground and washing out gold ore at small streams.

"All America is gold-mad," remarked the editor, since gold has become so important in the news of the world. At Folsom, Calif., The Junior Post Airship passengers saw an unusual sight. A big dredge was out in the center of a river taking about $1,000 in gold daily from the gravel beds at its bottom.

On the way back from California the airship flew over the Illinois corn husking contest in which 25,000 persons participated. It was great sport and the people looked as happy as if they had been attending a football game.

Naturally the fliers were much interested in the world series rodeo in New York, where they saw 20-year-old Rose Davis, of Fort Worth, Tex., win the world's championship as a cowgirl. Rose showed herself able to ride the difficult animals and threw the rope with all the skill of a Will Rogers.

The Junior Post Airship did not go to Europe on this trip, but flew back to Washington in time to see Sistie Dall, the President's granddaughter, receive the gift of a beautiful Japanese doll from the Junior Red Cross of Japan. The doll is dressed in Japanese costume and will have a proud place in the museum in the Red Cross Building at Washington.

Gen. John J. Pershing.

Gen. John Joseph Pershing, who was commander of the United States forces in France during the World War, was born, as many of our famous men, in a shanty near a little town in Missouri in 1860.

When a boy he was not thought of being bright, but was known for his determinations, one of which was education. At the age of 17 he taught in a country school. Then, money which he received and saved was used for entering Normal School at Kirksville, Mo. While he was there he saw in a newspaper an announcement, a notice of a competitive examination for West Point, which he tried for and won by one point.

He did many other services for our country besides commanding during the World War, such as fighting in the Spanish-American War in Cuba, subjugation of the Philippine Islands, military observer during the Russo-Japanese War.

The Story Book Lady.

"I wait every week until Saturday comes so we can all go on the weekly pilgrimage to Story Book Land with the Story Book Lady," said Anna as she hurried along with Madge and Alice to join the rest of the boys and girls of The Junior Post Writers' Club and the George Washington Junior Citizens for the weekly pilgrimage to Story Book Land.

"It does make the week-end very interesting," said Alice. "We enjoy ourselves on Saturday and then can think or write about what we have seen on Saturday night and can put the best books, the ones we like best, down on our Christmas lists."

"I think it is a very good idea," said Madge. "Mother wants us to make our lists early and do our shopping early this year."

"Mother wants us to give some books to The Post Toy and Doll Fund for the needy children of Washington this Christmas," said Anne. "I am going to look over my book shelves. I can well spare duplicates or some of the books I do not wish to keep always. Of course, mother understands that I can not part with my 'old friends' among my books any more than I could among people. But any book I give I will think of some boy or girl reading it Christmas Day and getting as much pleasure out of it as I did."

Visit Santa Claus Lady.

"We will all pay a special visit to the Santa Claus Lady in charge of The Post Toy and Doll Fund as last year," said the Story Book Lady when she had been told of the intention of many of the pilgrims to Story Book Land to give books to The Post Doll and Toy Fund this year.

"The queen is going to send in some fairy tales for The Post Doll and Toy Fund," said the Story Book Fairy as she flew out of the Fairy Tale Forest in her golden airplane, followed by Merry and Jolly, the Story Book Fairy Children.

"That will be very nice!" said the Story Book Lady.

"My grandsons, Blick, Flick and Little Mick, will do their part too," said Mr. Gnome, who keeps the gate of the Fairy Tale Bridge leading to Story Book Land.

"Of course we will," said Blick and Flick and Little Mick in a chorus as they helped their grandfather open the gate and stood in a row with their green hats with scarlet feathers in their hands as they made deep bows.

Thanksgiving Book.

"Oh, this looks like a very nice Thanksgiving story book, or at least a good one to read around Thanksgiving time, farms, a nice farm house and so forth," said Margaret as they came to the first book street.

"So it is," said the Story Book Lady, putting on her magic glasses and leading the way. "Let me see. It is called 'Where is Adelaide?' by Eliza Orme White (Houghton-Mifflin Co., Boston). Adelaide did so enjoy her life with the family who took her in as a little orphan in their home in Massachusetts. These were the days of hair in braids down the back and before automobiles came into use. The pretty illustrations are by Helen Sewell.

"Oh, oh," said Robert, "here are Aesop's Fables down the next book street. I do like them."

"We all do," said the Story Book Lady, leading the way down the book street. "Let me see. Of course the title is 'Aesop's Fables.' It has been edited and illustrated with wood engravings by Boris Artzybasheff (The Viking Press, New York). What a pretty book it is!"

Find Story About Pony.

"Oh, what a dear Shetland pony. I hope we can go down this book street," said Jenny as they came to another book street.

"We will all be glad to do so," said the Story Book Lady. "It is indeed a nice Shetland pony. Of course, his name in Spunky, for he is in a book called 'Spunky,' by Berta and Elmer Hader (The MacMillan Co., New York). "It is the life story of Spunky and we all like to read it, I am sure. It is written for the 8-year-old boys and girls, but we all like it just the same. Spunky had many adventures from his early days in the Shetland Islands across the Atlantic to California. And what pretty pictures are used in the book, the work of the author."

All the World Is Glad.

Some days my heart is gay and free,
But other days it's sad.
Today I'm just as happy as can be,
For all the world is glad.

A golden sun shines on the world
Of fading autumn hues;
The once green leaves are crisp and curled
And the sky is of grays and blues.

Wisps of clouds float in the sky
Like sailboats in a dream;
Carefree and light, reaching high
With silken sails, they seem.

Soon the sun will drop behind the hill
And on its way will wend,
Leaving night, quiet and still,
And all my dreams at an end.

Just Boys.

They're boys, just boys,
Let them have their fun,
Come, give them a chance,
And let them laugh and run.

For boys will be boys,
And you can never change their way,
For they're boys, just boys,
Let them have their day.

All too soon the time will come
When no longer they can play,
And no longer will you have them,
When they go to make their way.

Time will come and time will go.
So let them sing their song,
And God bless them every one,
For they will not be boys long.

WHAT A NAVY MAN SEES THROUGH HIS PORTHOLE. An unusual view of a mighty dreadnaught, framed by the steel walls of a window of a sister ship. This happens to be the famous H. M. S. Renown, frequently used as the personal ship of royalty, anchored peacefully off Ivergordon during a lull in recent British fleet maneuvers. but it might quite as easily be one of Uncle Sam's floating fortresses.

James A. Garfield, twentieth President of the United States, whose brilliant career was cut short by an assassin's bullet just a few months after he was inaugurated as President, was born Nov. 19, 1831. He acquired his education by his own determination becoming, at the age of 26, president of what is now Hiram College, Hiram, Ohio. Then he turned to politics and the army for his career, reaching important positions in quick succession.

The climax of his career was reached before he was 50 years old when, in 1880, he was elected President. Within the same year he was a United States Congressman, a Senator-elect, and President-elect. Garfield became the only President to see himself nominated when at the Republican convention of 1880 he was nominated as a compromise candidate after the delegates deadlocked on General Grant and others. He was shot in July, 1881, by Charles J. Guiteau, and died Sept. 19, just two months before his fiftieth birthday.

The long, long name at the top of this page is really more than a name—it tells the story of a treaty between Indian tribes that lived near the lake that bears the name. The name literally means: "You fish on your side; we fish on our side; nobody fish in the middle." This states the conditions of the agreement between the tribes after a dispute as to which tribe had fishing rights in the middle of the lake.

* * *

Correct usage demands that the American flag never be raised to half mast. When circumstances warrant flying the flag at half mast it should be raised to full mast then lowered to half mast—never just raised half way.

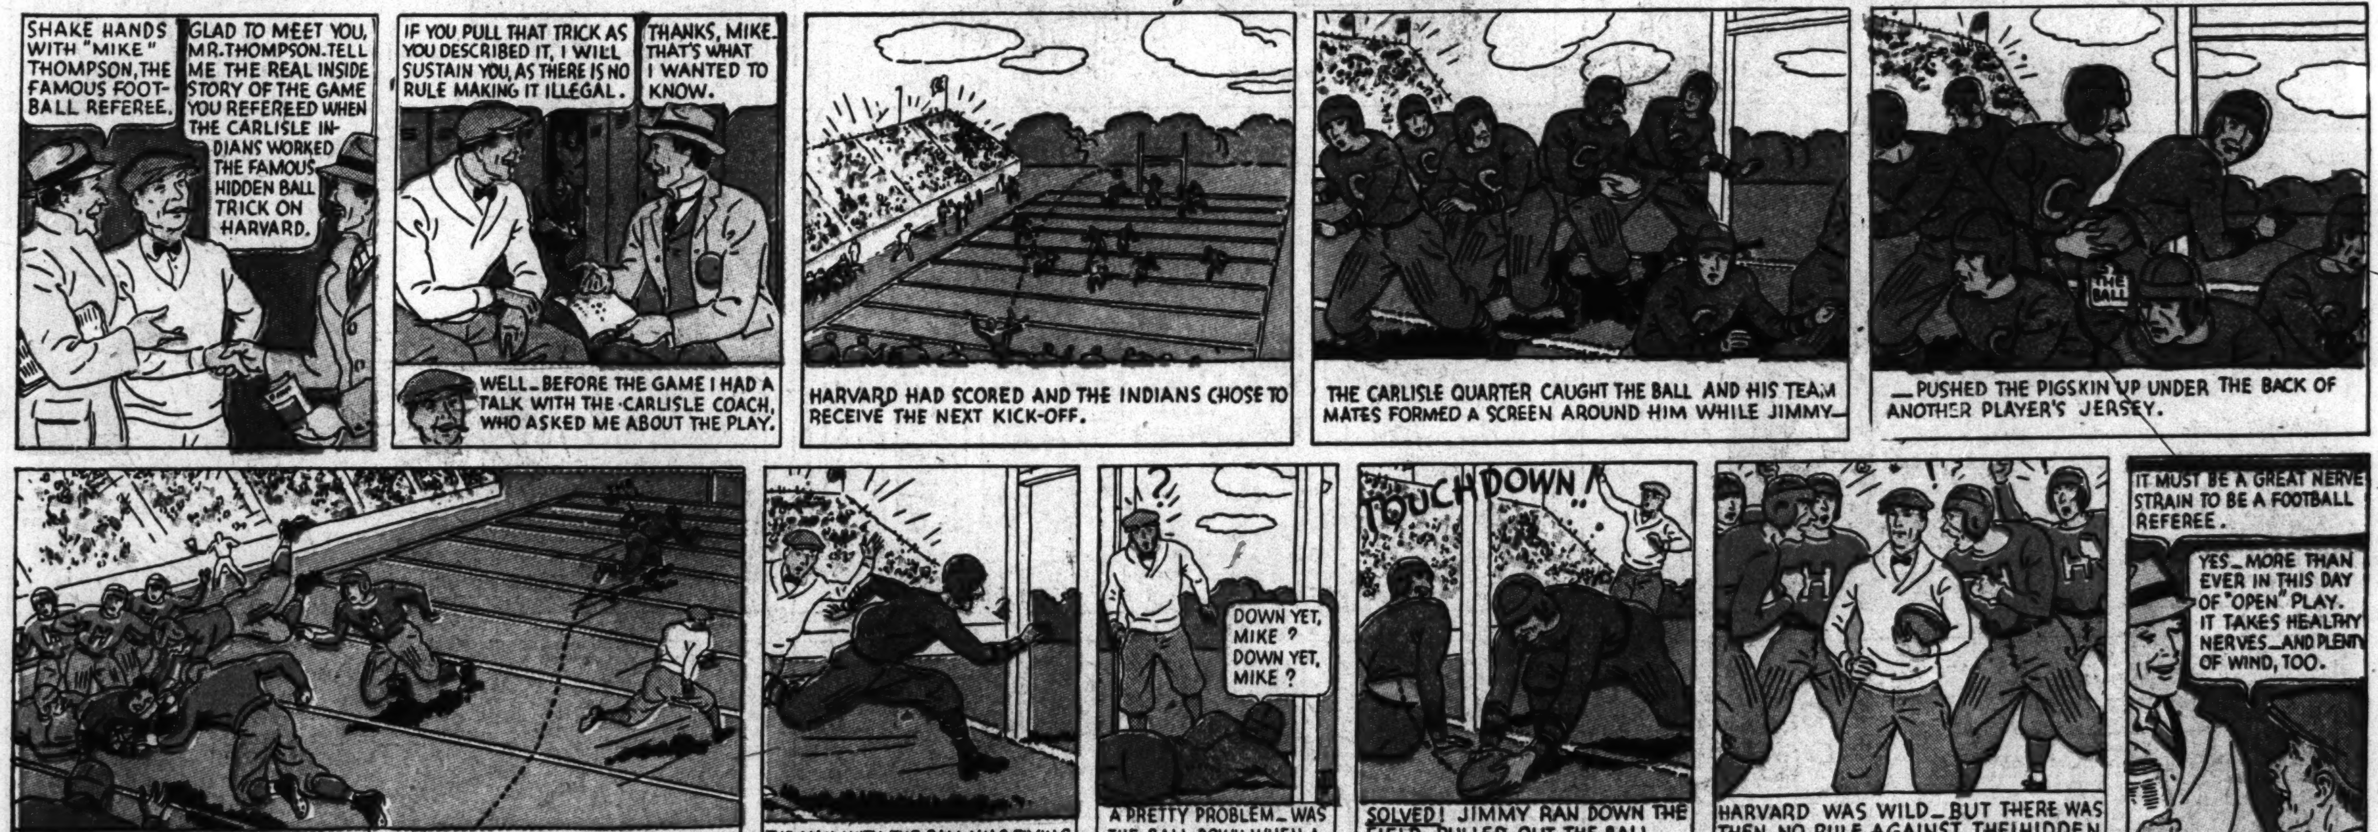
A FOOTBALL CLASSIC—
HARVARD vs. CARLISLE INDIANS

IT TAKES HEALTHY NERVES TO BE A FOOTBALL REFEREE

HOW ARE YOUR NERVES?

An ADVERTISEMENT of R.J. REYNOLDS TOBACCO CO.

Copyright, 1933, R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company



SHAKE HANDS WITH "MIKE" THOMPSON, THE FAMOUS FOOTBALL REFEREE.
GLAD TO MEET YOU, MR. THOMPSON. TELL ME THE REAL INSIDE STORY OF THE GAME YOU REFEREED WHEN THE CARLISLE INDIANS WORKED THE FAMOUS HIDDEN BALL TRICK ON HARVARD.
IF YOU PULL THAT TRICK AS YOU DESCRIBED IT, I WILL SUSTAIN YOU, AS THERE IS NO RULE MAKING IT ILLEGAL.
THANKS, MIKE. THAT'S WHAT I WANTED TO KNOW.
WELL—BEFORE THE GAME I HAD A TALK WITH THE CARLISLE COACH, WHO ASKED ME ABOUT THE PLAY.
HARVARD HAD SCORED AND THE INDIANS CHOSE TO RECEIVE THE NEXT KICK-OFF.
THE CARLISLE QUARTER CAUGHT THE BALL AND HIS TEAM MATES FORMED A SCREEN AROUND HIM WHILE JIMMY——PUSHED THE PIGSKIN UP UNDER THE BACK OF ANOTHER PLAYER'S JERSEY.
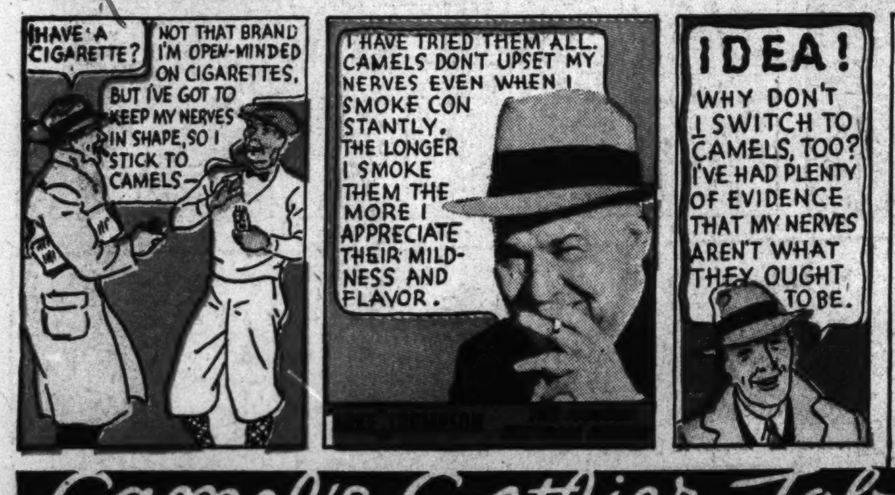
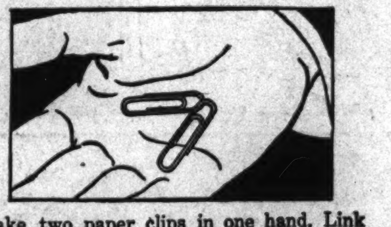
THE BALL
THE WHOLE HARVARD TEAM LANDED ON THE MAN THEY THOUGHT WAS THE BALL CARRIER.
BUT, WHAT HE ACTUALLY HAD TUCKED UNDER HIS ARM WAS HIS OWN HEADGEAR. MEANWHILE —
THE MAN WITH THE BALL WAS FLYING DOWN THE FIELD, WITH ME RIGHT AFTER HIM, WHILE THE CROWD ROARED.
DOWN YET, MIKE? DOWN YET, MIKE?
A PRETTY PROBLEM—WAS THE BALL DOWN WHEN A JERSEY LAY BETWEEN IT AND THE GROUND?
TOUCHDOWN!
SOLVED! JIMMY RAN DOWN THE FIELD, PULLED OUT THE BALL FROM ITS HIDING PLACE AND GROUNDED IT.
HARVARD WAS WILD—BUT THERE WAS THEN NO RULE AGAINST THE HIDDEN BALL—SO, AS AN IMPARTIAL OFFICIAL I RULED THAT THE TOUCHDOWN WAS O.K.
IT MUST BE A GREAT NERVE STRAIN TO BE A FOOTBALL REFEREE.
YES—MORE THAN EVER IN THIS DAY OF "OPEN" PLAY. IT TAKES HEALTHY NERVES—AND PLENTY OF WIND, TOO.



HAVE A CIGARETTE?
NOT THAT BRAND I'M OPEN-MINDED ON CIGARETTES, BUT I'VE GOT TO KEEP MY NERVES IN SHAPE, SO I STICK TO CAMELS—
I HAVE TRIED THEM ALL. CAMELS DON'T UPSET MY NERVES EVEN WHEN I SMOKE CONSTANTLY. THE LONGER I SMOKE THEM THE MORE I APPRECIATE THEIR MILDNESS AND FLAVOR.
IDEA! WHY DON'T I SWITCH TO CAMELS, TOO? I'VE HAD PLENTY OF EVIDENCE THAT MY NERVES AREN'T WHAT THEY OUGHT TO BE.

HOW ARE YOUR NERVES?



Take two paper clips in one hand. Link them together without touching hand to anything else. (It's easier if you put the two broad ends of the clips together.) Average time is two minutes.

Arthur Neu (Camel smoker), fly-casting champion and instructor, does it in ten seconds.

IT IS MORE FUN TO KNOW—

FOR HEALTHY NERVES.. CAMELS ARE MADE FROM FINER, MORE EXPENSIVE TOBACCOS THAN ANY OTHER POPULAR BRAND. YOUR TASTE AND YOUR NERVES WILL CONFIRM THIS. BEGIN TODAY!

CAMEL

YOU HAVE FURTHERMORE FULFILLED EVERY REQUIREMENT OF THE REWARD OFFER— IN BRINGING TO JUSTICE THOSE OUTLAWS, DESPERADOES AND BRIGANDS— YOU HAVE WORKED BRAVELY AND UNSELFISHLY TO CHECK THE COURSE OF CRIME AND MAKE YOURSELVES STERLING MODELS OF GOOD CITIZENSHIP— AND SO I HAVE THE HONOR TO PRESENT EACH OF YOU WITH A CHECK FOR $5,000.— CONGRATULATIONS, MY BOYS—

MY BOY— A REAL GUMP! WELL— IT'S THE OLD STORY ALL OVER AGAIN— LIKE FATHER— LIKE SON—

I'D HAVE HAD IT DIFFERENT, UNCLE WALT. I'D HAVE HAD THE TREES KEEP THEIR LEAVES IN THE WINTER AN' SHED 'EM IN THE SUMMER WHEN IT'S HOT.
CAN YOU TOUCH YOUR TOES, TRIXIE?
SURE. I CAN PUT MY HANDS FLAT ON THE GROUND. LOOK SKEEZIX!
CAN YOU FLIP YOURSELF UP ONTO YOUR FEET?
I DUNNO. I CAN DO THE CART WHEEL.
DOIN' STUNTS? I USED TO KNOW SOME GOOD ONES MYSELF.
HERE'S ONE—LET YOURSELF DOWN SLOWLY AND BALANCE ON ONE FOOT—
THAT'S IT ONLY YOU'RE SUPPOSED TO COME BACK UP.
ANYWAY, YOU DID HALF OF IT, UNCLE WALT.
THIS ONE IS CALLED SKINNING THE CAT. WATCH IT.
GEE, DID IT HURT YOU, UNCLE WALT?
NO, I'M JUST A LITTLE OUT OF PRACTICE, THAT'S ALL.
BOY THAT WAS RICH! I'D GIVE SIX BITS TO HAVE IT IN MOVING PICTURES.
BY GOLLY, I USED TO DO THAT ONE!
WHAT'S THE MATTER, UNCLE AVERY?
NOTHIN'. I WAS JUST SWEEPIN' THE FLOOR AND THE BROOM FLEW OUT OF MY HANDS.

I UNDERSTAND MY HUSBAND IS RUNNING AROUND WITH A DIZZY BLOND, AND IF HE IS - I'M GOING TO WANT A DIVORCE AND PLENTY OF ALIMONY!
-BUT YOU'RE NOT SURE, MRS. CATTY, ARE YOU?
YOU CAN'T DO A THING WITHOUT EVIDENCE! NOW MY ADVICE WOULD BE TO JUST GIVE YOUR HUSBAND AND THIS BLOND ENOUGH ROPE -
I SHOULD SAY NOT!! JUST GIVE THEM ENOUGH ROPE - AND THEY'LL SKIP!!

DICK TRACY

IT'S A MYSTERY TO ALL OF US, MR. TRACY- WE NEVER IMAGINED SUCH A THING-COULD HAPPEN
THAT'S THE BED YOUR BOY OCCUPIED, MR. TRACY-BUT HE'S GONE! HE DISAPPEARED DURING THE NIGHT. WHEN THE NURSE CAME IN THIS MORNING, SHE FOUND HIS BED EMPTY.
HE MUST HAVE LEFT THROUGH THAT WINDOW.
YOU MEAN HE MUST HAVE BEEN KIDNAPED THROUGH THAT WINDOW.
DO YOU THINK YOUR BOY WAS TAKEN?
IT COULDN'T HAVE BEEN ANYTHING ELSE! JUNIOR HAD NO REASON FOR LEAVING HERE
OH, BY THE WAY, MR. TRACY- MEET THE PARENTS OF DONNIE, THE BOY WHO WAS BROUGHT IN HERE LAST WEEK WHEN HE WAS KNOCKED DOWN BY THAT TRUCK.
OH, MR. TRACY, WE'RE VERY SORRY FOR YOU OVER THE DISAPPEARANCE OF YOUR BOY. WE'RE MYSTIFIED TOO OVER THE CASE OF DONNIE. JUST WHY HE WAS PUSHING THAT BABY BUGGY WITH THE BONDS IN IT IS A MYSTERY TO US. YOU KNOW HE HASN'T BEEN CONSCIOUS SINCE THE ACCIDENT. HE HASN'T EXPLAINED A THING!
MR. GIMLEY, SOMETHING TELLS ME THE CASES OF YOUR BOY AND MINE MAY BE VERY CLOSELY RELATED WHEN THIS THING IS FINALLY SETTLED.
YOU..YOU MEAN THERE MAY..BE SOME--CONNECTION--
AND IN ANOTHER PART OF THE CITY . . .
BUT I TELL YOU THAT ISN'T THE KID THAT PUSHED THE BABY BUGGY FOR ME-YOU'VE GOT THE WRONG KID!
BUT HOW COULD IT BE? I WENT TO THE ROOM YOU POINTED OUT TO ME!
LISTEN-THIS AINT THE KID- THAT'S ALL! THE KID WE WANT IS DARK-HAIRED AND BESIDES, HE'S STILL UNCONSCIOUS! THAT'S THE REASON I WANT 'IM IN A HURRY. I WANT 'IM BEFORE HE REGAINS CONSCIOUSNESS AND CAN TALK! DO YOU GET ME?
BUT WHEN YOU TOLD THAT KID TO PUSH THE BABY CARRIAGE FOR YOU HE THOUGHT THERE WAS A BABY IN IT. HE DIDN'T KNOW IT WAS LOADED WITH BONDS...SO HOW CAN HE TALK?
THAT MAKES NO DIFFERENCE. HE CAN DESCRIBE MY LOOKS- CAN'T HE?..AND HE CAN IDENTIFY ME!
TRACY TOLD ME HOW TO EXPAND YOUR MUSCLES AND BODY WHEN ANYBODY TIES YOU UP, SO THAT WHEN YOU RELAX YOU CAN WORK YOURSELF LOOSE. I DID THAT...AND NOW I WONDER IF I CAN GET THESE ROPES OFF.
AH! I'VE GOT ONE ARM LOOSE! NOW IF I CAN...OH BOY- THERE'S A PISTOL IN THAT HOLSTER HANGING ON THAT CHAIR!
LISTEN, THE BEST THING WE CAN DO IS BLINDFOLD THIS KID- TAKE HIM OVER ON SOME SIDE STREET, AND RELEASE HIM-THEN SCRAM OUT OF TOWN. WE DON'T WANT NO KIDNAPING CHARGES ON OUR HEADS.
OKAY. LET'S GET IT OVER WITH I'M GITTIN' JITTERY.
EASY YOU BIRDS! STAY WHERE YOU ARE!
WHAT TH'-
LOOK OUT! THE LITTLE FOOL MIGHT PULL THE TRIGGER- THAT GUN'S LOADED!
HA! HA! WE WAS JUST PLAYING WITH YOU, KID! TAKE IT EASY-WE WAS ONLY JOKING.
WELL - I'M NOT JOKING! TRACY SHOWED ME HOW TO USE A GUN.. AND I'M GOING TO USE IT NOW TO TAKE IN A COUPLE OF KIDNAPERS. KEEP YOUR HANDS UP!
